"Is Not an Alien Force Already Among Us?"

—President Reagan 9/21/87

Above is a photo of the Andromeda galaxy. No longer is this just something for the astronomers to gaze at. We are now travelling to the distant galaxies of our Universe!

While you may be comfortably relaxing in front of your TV watching the evening news, there is so much more going on in this universe. Something you will never see on the news. Something that will drag you into utter disbelief!

Our government has been involved in activities on other planets and even in other galaxies, If you knew the full extent of where we've been and what we are doing there, it would take you beyond being shocked.

Then when you understand the fantastic, unbelievable technologies they are in control of, that could destroy vast galaxies and numerous forms of life or also in right hands could be put to use here on Earth to bring amazing improvements in health and longevity, transportation, our environment and so much more!

You will soon understand that we are living in a whole new world and they are no longer able to keep it from us... But also, that we as individuals are no longer playing in the sandbox, we now have responsibilities at a much higher level that match the higher dimensions we are entering. What are they? That's for each one of us to realize and act upon on a personal level!

An Introduction to the Secret Space Program

My Friend,

There's evidence that the Secret Space Program started in the era of Roswell, but that's all old news and I won't put you to sleep with it. Let's move on to what's been hidden from you today, the stuff that's going to knock-your-socks-off!

There have been many strange revelations on our involvement in space over the years. So many bizarre stories have appeared that seem unbelievable which is why I have stayed away from covering them.

But today, as we look at all the programs and discoveries that are now starting to become commonplace in this world and beyond and you realize that these were once considered just sci-fi stories, we will understand that nothing is really impossible today!

Speaking of sci-fi... did you realize that a lot of those sci-fi movies were actually based on fact and these unbelievable things were actually taking place unbeknown to us and our government was involved in them? Yes, it has come out that the government was leaking info on what was actually taking place to movie producers and writers, just to start getting us accustomed to the possibilities of what soon would become a part of our reality!

What got me started thinking of the possibilities of more happening in space than we had realized was the Face on Mars that we got a glimpse of in 1976 thanks to the Viking Mission. Sure, scientists denied it was real, but there were the possibilities that there was something to it. Especially with the NASA deceptions and coverups that were going on, such as hiding the revealing photos.

(After the release of the Face photo, they released new photos taken later and at different angles showing that "there really wasn't anything to see after all kids, go back to what you were doing." And then they were hiding newer photos that showed the Face even clearer!)

So now with the creation of the U.S. Space Force, everything has opened up. Although they want us to think that this Space Force is something new, don't fall for it... They are just admitting to something that has been going on for years and are finally trying to come clean on it before we realize what they have been pulling on us.

Plus, they can now openly claim billions (trillions?) in funding without having to wear a mask to get it from us.

Now as more government informers have come forward and allowed us to fit in the missing pieces to this story, it is time for us to take a closer look at what now appears to be an amazing reality we are living in the middle of! So, let's take off those government issued blinders and look at what's really going on!

Follow along as we reveal:

- Our presence throughout the galaxy with military, civilians and even our citizens forced into slavery!
- Military weapons being used in space! (And alien weapons that may be used against us and our planet, or even against certain alien races that we've had falling outs with!
- Actual and major planned changes to other worlds!
- Our Moon that has been occupied by human and alien races for a long time!
- Huge Mining operations, numerous colonies, (alien as well as ours and on the Moon as well as other locations), and the reality that the Moon is hollow and fabricated, much like an enormous alien created satellite!

U.S. Space Force

The U.S. Space Force is official! Created on Dec. 20, 2019, it now joins the Air Force, Army, Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard as a branch of the U.S. military.

“Space is the world’s newest warfighting domain,” Trump said at a signing ceremony. “Amid grave threats to our national security, American superiority in space is absolutely vital. We’re leading, but we’re not leading by enough, and very shortly, we’ll be leading by a lot.”

At this time, all that really means is everyone at Air Force Space Command will now be assigned to Space Force. Over the next 18 months, according to officials, the finer details of manning and training the new branch will be hammered out and set in motion.

“It’s going to be really important that we get this right. A uniform, a patch, a song (weapons that can blow-up whole planets and wipe out alien races) — it gets to the culture of a service,” said Air Force Gen. Jay Raymond, the head of Air Force Space Command and U.S. Space Command, who will lead Space Force until a chief of space operations is confirmed by the Senate. “There’s a lot of work going on toward that end. It’s going to take a long time to get to that point, but that’s not something we’re going to roll out on day one.”

For now, the 16,000 active-duty airmen and civilians who work at Air Force Space Command will be assigned to the Space Force, but nothing else will change. Uniforms, a rank structure, training and education are all to be determined, and for the foreseeable future, Space Force will continue to be manned by airmen wearing Air Force uniforms, subject to that service's fitness program, personnel system and so on.

Meanwhile, U.S Space Command will continue to exist as a combatant command, similar to Cyber Command, Special Operations Command and others.

There is also a likelihood that Air Force bases that have dealt mainly with space operations could see a re-brand — think Vandenberg Space Force Base, California, or Schriever Space Force Base, Colorado.

Plans are in motion to re-designate Air Force units with a space-only mission and realign bases for the space mission.

That includes various Colorado facilities, including Buckley Air Force Base, Cheyenne Mountain Air Force Station, Peterson Air Force Base and Schriever Air Force Base, as well as the Army's Redstone Arsenal in Alabama, Vandenberg, and Patrick Air Force Base in Florida

Secret Space Program

"Over the years I have encountered no shortage of quiet, serious-minded people who tell me of their knowledge that there is such a covert program. Are there bases on the far side of the Moon? I do not know for sure, but I cannot rule it out." --Richard Dolan

Although NASA's manned space program is largely no more, there exists – maybe deep within the heart of the military – a secret group that is running a clandestine space program. We might even be talking about highly classified return missions to the Moon, and possibly even secret flights to Mars and beyond. Or maybe we are already doing those things and have been for years! (of this I now have no doubt.)

Is a powerful group controlling what we know – or don't know – about the secrets of outer space?

(Actually, what we have been involved in is way beyond just mere manned missions to the Moon and Mars. We may have traveled to the home planet of E.T., met his family, set up trade deals as well as manned colonies!)

Why does all this seem so strange to us? We watch on TV all the NASA rocket launches, satellites and the space station even a Moon landing. And we may marvel at the amazing technology we have developed.

Then information starts to leak out that this technology is archaic, that it is like the horse and buggy of our ancestors. But that is too difficult for our minds to comprehend, we don't want to believe it, we can't believe it, it doesn't fit in with our concepts of the world.

This is kind of like the claims of when the first European explorers arrived on the shores of America and the local Indians didn't see the ships heading towards their shore, they had no concept of them being real, just like the elephant in the room. They just don't exist. They can't.

Maybe to better understand this we need to realize that we have been fooled, lied to and tricked all our lives. Our system of education, our history books, our system of healthcare, religion, even our monetary system, it's all wrong! We've been deceived! And it's all to control us. We've even been deceived about who we really are, and the powers we possess, but that's for another book.

Here's the key to understand all this: We need to realize that we live under a two-part system. And we are only allowed to see and experience the make-believe part.

Our government is actually run by the secret government that we don't even see or even fathom. The above surface part with the politicians and elections is just a circus to pacify us and make us think we are in control or at least have a say in what's happening to us.

Our medical system is just there to drug us and take away our symptoms and even add to our ailments (with their knives and poisons). Sometimes (if you listen closely) they even claim that they are not there to heal us. And they do a great job of grabbing large sums of money from us although sometimes they are able to fool us with medical insurance and government help, so we think it isn't costing us much, but don't be fooled, we are all paying our share, even if it isn't directly. And they like to make us feel that we are making a difference by donating money to find a cure. How much of that goes to the pharmaceutical conglomerates to make more drugs while they hide the real cures from us gullible sheep? On the other side of the coin are the secrets of perfect health and mindpower that are being hidden from us.

And did you realize that there is a two-tier system in higher education/technology research? We have the public higher education and scientific world and then there is the upper tier domain for clandestine R&D, unknown to many of us, especially elected authorities who may even be responsible for funding them. I'm referring to scientific and technical programs being carried out in various publicly and privately funded laboratories and research centers, Many are affiliated with military and intelligence agencies, in "exotic" areas that are hidden from view and scrutiny by those without a need to know. Those long suspected "special access" programs are hiding within the American military-industrial-intelligence complex.

And now that leads us to NASA and the publicly visible space projects we are familiar with compared to the real space program that is so advanced your mind would never be able to comprehend the technology being developed and the distant worlds and alien races we are visiting, dealing with and maybe even controlling! (Or maybe even being controlled by them?)

Are you ready to continue on or is your head ready to explode?

NASA

For decades, the world has questioned the space exploration narrative coming from NASA, (or as some refer to it as "Never A Straight Answer"). You may not realize this, but NASA is essentially a military organization, which means that this agency could protect sensitive information under the guise of defending national security. While the evidence seems to suggest that NASA did indeed send human beings to the Moon, many of the pictures taken on the Moon are said to have been faked or altered, and NASA has also altered images and video taken from the International Space Station (ISS).

In 2002, Gary McKinnon hacked into NASA's computer systems, and the data that he found seems to corroborate the supposition that this government agency is hiding information from the public. McKinnon uncovered pictures of UFOs that had been edited out of satellite imagery, flight manifests for spacecraft that didn't officially exist, and lists of military officers involved in extraterrestrial operations.

Buzz Aldrin, one of the first men on the Moon, has reported encountering an L-shaped UFO, and this space veteran also drew attention to an artificially constructed monolith on Mars's moon Phobos during a startling C-SPAN interview.

On multiple nights in the summer of 1952, dozens of UFOs circled over the Capitol Building in Washington, DC. Who piloted these craft, who hid the information that Gary McKinnon found, and who put that monolith on Phobos? There's a mystery here waiting to be discovered, and we will explore some of the purported secret space programs whose personnel may hold the answers.

A Clue from President Reagan

From newly released material found in President Reagan's Diary. The entry for Tuesday, June 11, 1985 (page 334) reads:

Lunch with 5 top space scientists...

"It was fascinating. Space truly is the last frontier and some of the developments there in astronomy etc. are like science fiction, except they are real. I learned that our shuttle capacity is such that we could orbit 300 people."

The now grounded Space Shuttle held a maximum of eight people and only five were built for space flight. So, it would be impossible to place and maintain 300 astronauts in orbit. Did President Reagan reveal the existence of a highly classified space program that could accommodate hundreds of astronauts in orbit? (Actually, President Reagan knew of and approved some aspects of the SSP earlier).

Apparently hidden within one of the combatant commands of the U.S. military, Strategic Command has a highly classified fleet of aircraft carrier sized antigravity vehicles that operate in outer space. And now, as this space fleet grows, President Trump has recommended it become a new military component.

The United States has organized its military forces into ten unified combatant commands respectively led by a single four star General or Admiral who reports directly to the Secretary of Defense. Only these commanders know of the existence of UFOs and appoint who has a need to know. Six of the unified commands span the globe in terms of different geographical areas. In addition, there are four functional commands where specialized military activities are run by a single "Combatant Commander."

From 1985 to 2002 Space Command was responsible for outer space operations by the U.S. military. In June 2002, Space Command merged with another of the functional commands – Strategic Command, Offutt Air Force Base, Neb. Which is responsible for a range of space, satellite, missile, nuclear and intelligence activities. (It was reestablished in 2019).

U.S. Navy Secret Space Program – Solar Warden

Gene Roddenberry Based Star Trek on Secret US Navy Space Fleet!

There is significant evidence that its creator, Gene Roddenberry, did not simply come up with the idea of Star Trek on his own. Instead he was encouraged to create the series based on classified information surrounding the development of a secret U.S. Navy space fleet that would build a broad extraterrestrial alliance. This led Roddenberry to come up with the idea of a United Federation of Planets, with its military headquarters in San Francisco.

Since 1980, a secret space fleet code named Solar Warden has been in operation unknown to the public.

Solar Warden is a secret space program run by the U.S. Navy. It is responsible for monitoring all incoming and outgoing traffic in the solar system. It patrols and defends our solar system. It will also travel to other star systems for offensive missions. Around the late-90's, Solar Warden changed its name to Radiant Guardian.

Radiant Guardian is divided into two fleets: a military offensive/defensive fleet and a scientific/R&D fleet. Before an extraterrestrial craft can enter our solar system, it receives protocols transmitted from one of several beacons outside of our solar system. They are instructed to stop within a certain quadrant before sending an Identification Friend or Foe. They then receive a flight path from an air traffic controller.

The solar system is broken down into grids which are further broken down into patrol zones. These are zones where no craft should be present. Trespassers are warded off or engaged, depending on the circumstances. The carriers deploy multiple airwings at once to each patrol a zone. Afterward, they return to the carrier to patrol a new grid.

The Solar Warden fleet is made up of over eight battle groups. The fleet is made of carriers, fighters, triangular shuttles, research vessels, troop transport ships, hospital ships, and supply ships. The carriers can be over a mile long. The small carriers are modular and can function as research vessels, troop transport ships, or hospital ships.

The carriers were designed to carry a large crew for extended periods of time and travel to other star systems, although Solar Warden was mostly kept to just inside our solar system and the local star cluster on rare occasions. The stealth-ship-like vessels operate in near space.

They have some stations located throughout the solar system where vessels dock for repairs, conferences, personnel transfers, etc. They have some other bases on moons and on Venus, on its surface and in its upper atmosphere. There are also some bases in nearby star systems.

The officers are drawn from Naval Space Command. While the top brass are career military, the rank and file are MILABs. They recruit mostly American as well as some Canadian, British, and Australian personnel.

For propulsion, the cigar-shaped vehicles use a temporal drive based on “principles of quantum entanglement between certain isotopes.” They are propelled by left/right torsion drives. The bubble created by the R-twist is slightly larger than that of the L-twist. This propels the craft forward in the direction of the R-twist.

In the beginning, they used submarines retrofitted with torsion field engines. The U.S. Navy began working with aircraft companies in the 1950’s to design spacecraft carriers. They were eventually constructed in the late 1970’s inside massive underground shipyards beneath the Wasatch Mountains of Utah. They were also constructed in Antarctica. Once the carriers were 60% constructed, the engineering crew lived on the craft and assisted with the buildout. In 1980, President Reagan was briefed on the existence of four or five ET races and on Project Solar Warden. Afterward, Reagan pushed forward the Solar Warden agenda even further than anticipated. The first battle group became operational in 1984. The fleet received major upgrades during the Reagan administration.

When Gary McKinnon hacked into U.S. Space Command computers a number of years ago and learned of the existence of “non-terrestrial officers” and “fleet-to-fleet transfers” and a secret program called “Solar Warden”, he was charged by the Bush Justice Department with having committed “the biggest military computer hack of all time”, and stood to face prison time of up to 70 years after extradition from UK.

But trying McKinnon in open court would involve his testifying to the above classified facts, and his attorney would be able to subpoena government officers to testify under oath about the Navy’s Space Fleet.

Yes, McKinnon actually found information related to the black budget program Solar Warden! This program came into existence in tandem with the “Star Wars” space defense initiative. McKinnon also found out about the ships or craft within Solar Warden. It is said that there are about eight cigar-shaped Motherships (each longer than two football fields end-to-end) and 43 small “scout ships.

The most recent information available on Solar Warden (as of 2005), is similar to McKinnon’s. Eight ships, equivalent to aircraft carriers and forty-three ‘protectors,’ which are space planes. One was lost recently to an accident in Mars' orbit while it was attempting to re-supply the multinational colony within Mars. Just imagine what it is up to now in 2020!

This base was established in 1964 by American and Soviet teamwork. Not everything is, as it seems.

We have visited all the planets in our solar system, at a distance of course, except Mercury. We have landed on Pluto and a few moons. The technology came from back engineering alien-disc wreckage and at times with alien assistance.

In time the truth will slowly come out. Many people around the world are now witnessing craft moving around in the skies and sub space that completely defy gravity. Whether they are part of the Solar Warden secret program or secret military experimental aircraft from other programs, or even actual alien craft is unknown to most of us at this time.

The Solar Warden Space Fleet operates under the US Naval Network and Space Operations Command (NNSOC) [formerly Naval Space Command]. There are approximately 300 personnel involved at that facility, with the figure rising.

Solar Warden is said to be made up mostly from U.S. aerospace Black Projects contractors. It is also said that the program is tested and operated from secret military bases such as Area 51.

Will this program change our views on space exploration and travel? Or will it be too hard for most of us to fathom and will just be considered more science fiction stuff? Just stuff from Star Wars?

Secret space program insider William Tompkins claims to have helped develop the vessels used in the Solar Warden fleet. Tompkins was apparently inducted into classified aerospace think tanks before he even graduated high school, due to his stunning proficiency at building models of naval ships. Throughout his career, Tompkins received telepathic information, including blueprints, from benevolent extraterrestrials who wanted us to be able to defend ourselves.

According to the independent testimony of multiple insiders, a treaty was made in the 1950s between malevolent ETs, represented by breakaway Nazis, and the Eisenhower administration. In exchange for live human subjects to use for biological materials, these aliens would guarantee the military supremacy of the United States. Strict quotas were set to ensure that only a small number of humans would be abducted. It quickly became apparent, however, that the ETs were not sticking to their end of the bargain.

Solar Warden was developed as a form of interplanetary border control to stop malevolent aliens from stealing more humans than they were allotted. Developed in the 1960s and 1970s and deployed in 1980, Solar Warden is one of earliest secret space programs. As international corporate interests became aware of the potential profits available from interacting with ETs, however, another program was soon developed.

Advanced Aerospace Threat Identification Program

In 2007, Senator Harry Reid of Nevada, in which Area 51 is located, and who then chaired the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, set up a new study group with the support of fellow Senators, Inouye and Stevens, under the name of AATIP (Advanced Aerospace Threat Identification Program) at the suggestion of his friend, billionaire Robert Bigelow, chairman of Bigelow Aerospace, a contractor to NASA which conducted research on UFOs and collected substantial evidence of the extraterrestrial presence.

Senator Reid wished to gather information on the secret work being carried out outside the purview of Congressional authorities and got an appropriation of $22 million for a five-year budget. The investigations were entrusted to Bigelow's aerospace research division and coordinated by Earthtech of Austin, Texas, an R&D center in frontier areas of science headed by Dr. Harold Puthoff, formerly at Stanford Research Institute. AATIP under the stewardship of high-ranking intelligence officer Luis Elizondo, commissioned a still unissued (as far as we know) 490-page report and collected 38 classified papers from a number of universities and research centers reflecting some of the goals pursued at the behest of the DIA (as Defense Intelligence Research Documents or DIRD) and other military intelligence bodies.

Did you realize that Bigelow, in 1996, bought a 480-acre Utah cattle ranch that some believe is the site of an interdimensional doorway used by alien shapeshifters and stationed watchers there? (The Skinwalker Ranch.) It was sold in 2016 to Adamantium Holdings. I wonder what kind of investigations are going on there now?

AATIP remained unknown to the public until both the New York Times and the Washington Post on December 16, 2017 published articles about it with the usual skeptical rumblings and denials. They both, however, provided online links to a film taken in 2004 by Super Hornet jet pilots from the USS Nimitz, off the coast of Southern California, of a fleet of extremely fast flying objects, exhibiting performances far beyond the abilities of the most advanced aircraft, whose shapes suggested "tictacs" which became their moniker.

Physicist Jack Sarfatti, formerly at San Diego State University, has gone on record to say he is doing research on the propulsion system of the "Tic tac" by studying "alien" recovered metamaterials in the custody of Dr. Puthoff's Earthtech. The existence of those materials of non-earthly origin has been officially confirmed.

In January of this year a Freedom Of Information Act request from Steven Aftergood, director of the Federation of American Scientists against Government Secrecy, led to the release by the DIA of the list of titles of 38 government-funded research reports gathered by AATIP as part of the process to "read in" on a need-to-know basis, officials in the military and civilian administrations. They include two papers leaked earlier by Corey Goode, respectively entitled Traversable Wormholes, Stargates and Negative Energy (number 8 in the list) and Warp Drive, Dark Energy and the Manipulation of Extra-Dimensions (number 19).

Others are dedicated to invisibility cloaking technologies, propulsion systems from space vacuum, anti-gravity, space communication based on Quantum Entanglement and Non-Locality, programmable matter, negative mass propulsion and other such topics not publicly recognized as being within the realm of realistic possibilities.

Cynics who alleged that all this is speculative mumbo-jumbo amounting to a waste of public money did not consider that the disclosure from AATIP seems to be what the CIA calls a “limited hangout”: i.e. a superficial glimpse of a much larger secret cloaked in “plausible deniability”.

But wait... There’s more to this story, there may even be a link to the Secret Space Program:

An article I just read claims that most of the 22 million went to an aerospace research company run by a Robert Bigelow, who is currently working with NASA to produce expandable craft for humans to use in space. Could these actually be for the SSP and was this just a way to transfer money to the Secret Space Program?

Inside Skinwalker Ranch

Locals say the ranch has been plagued by strange creatures and cattle mutilations. It's also been used for government UFO research. So, what's really happening there?

Local lore has always told that strange lights hover over this area and that strange creatures roam the wilderness here. One tale tells of the Ute, an Indigenous tribe from this valley and their uneasy alliance with the Navajo. Siding with American military forces in the late 19th century, the Ute helped force the Navajo people out of the area. Local lore suggests that the Navajo unleashed a Skinwalker, a shapeshifter who can possess animals' skin.

When previous owners, the Sherman's, bought the property in 1994. they alleged that their cows were mutilated with surgical precision in broad daylight and that their family was hunted by strange aerial objects and floating orbs of light. They heard disembodied voices, experienced poltergeist activity, witnessed horrible monsters emerging from portals, and claimed they encountered a wolf that, when shot several times by a high-powered rifle at point blank range, did not die.

In 1996 Robert Bigelow bought the ranch from the Sherman's. Bigelow's National Institute for Discovery Science (NIDS) and Bigelow Advanced Aerospace Space Studies (BAASS) spent more than two decades studying the strange anomalies that occurred on the property.

During Bigelow's tenure as owner, wild rumors have ranged from the ranch being a site of secret government weapons testing to hiding underground alien bases. Stories about shapeshifting monsters, interdimensional portals, UFO sightings, and poltergeists continue to this day.

Over the last year, several strange cases of extreme electromagnetic fields have been logged on the ranch. These EM fields are transient, they come and go, move around and at times have reached levels dangerous to humans.

According to the ranch team, several times in the last few years, people on the ranch have become ill and some even required hospitalization. The caretaker was hospitalized with swelling in the brain and the collection of fluid between the skull and the scalp, which is believed occurred when he attempted to dig on the ranch.

Over the summer, three guests on the ranch reported strange skin inflammation, nausea, and extreme lassitude within a close period of time and several went to the local emergency room

Whatever the thing on this ranch is, it can drain your phone battery in a second, give people radiation burns, and generate insane levels of electromagnetic frequencies.

Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate

"Extraterrestrial UFOs Are Real"

--Ben Rich Lockheed Skunk Works Director

Rumors that the U.S. has a highly classified fleet of antigravity vehicles have circulated for years. On March 23, 1993, at an engineering conference in Los Angeles, Dr. Ben Rich, former CEO of Lockheed's Skunkworks, showed a slide with a black disk headed for space and said:

"We now have the technology to take ET home!"

Corporate and military whistle blowers have come forward to claim firsthand knowledge of classified space vehicles using antigravity technology such as the Aurora and TR-3B. In his book, "The Hunt for Zero Point," Jane's Defense Weekly analyst Nick Cook writes about the Aurora: "there has been speculation since the late 1980s about the existence of a secret replacement for the Blackbird, a mythical plane called the Aurora that supposedly flew twice as fast and on the edges of space".

Other whistle blowers such as Edgar Fouche, a former contractor with the Department of Defense, have come forward to claim that the Blackbird's [or SR-71] replacement, the Aurora actually comprises two types of hypersonic aircraft used for space flight.

He said: "The Aurora comprises the SR-75 capable of speeds above Mach 5, and acts as a mother ship for the SR-74 that can travel at speeds of Mach 18 or more into space to deliver satellites."

More significant is the large triangular vehicle, the TR-3B that Fouche claims generates an intense magnetic field that reduces its weight by 89%. He says that the TR-3B uses the Biefeld-Brown effect (created by large electrostatic charges) to reduce its weight so that more conventional propulsion systems such as scramjets can give it amazing speeds.

This would be well above Mach 18 that he claims is the speed of the SR-74. Fouche claims the TR-3B is 600 feet across which would make it similar in size to an aircraft carrier.

Ted Twietmeyer writes that a Space Command photograph had the following citation: ... highlights the team for its exceptional support in keeping the space shuttle, International Space Station and its crews safe from the dangers of orbital debris, spacecraft collisions and other inherent hazards of orbit operations.

Neither USAF Space Command nor Strategic Command is publicly known to have any kind of space vehicle that would assist the Space Shuttle (now decommissioned) or International Space Station from orbital dangers.

Normally, both NASA vehicles would require gradual orbital corrections that would take much time and be insufficient to deal with an immediate threat. According to Ted Twietmeyer, the citation is circumstantial evidence for the existence of antigravity vehicles with advanced particle beam weapons that could remove orbital debris from the path of NASA vehicles.

Being armed with particle beam or quantum weaponry they may also have chemical lasers or electrically excited reactor powered lasers and other weaponry. There were several eyewitness reports of hovering black triangles firing at targets in Iraq during the early days of the war. (War has historically been the best proving ground for all new weapons).

There is a massive anti-gravity energy field surrounding these vehicles which interferes with all electronic devices, making it unlikely anyone could ever get images of them. In the UK, the media are forbidden under the UK Secrets Act from covering or reporting on sightings of black triangles.

That alone proves that black triangles exist. The TR-3 has been in service since the mid-1990s, and NASA's space program was nothing more than on-going entertainment to distract the public.

Lockheed's "Skunk Works" division has a penchant for secrecy. The existence of the F-117A stealth fighter was kept secret for nearly ten years until the eve of the Gulf War.

Dr. Ben R. Rich former Lockheed Skunk Works director confirmed:

1. There are 2 types of UFOs — the ones we build and ones 'they' build. We learned from both crash retrievals and actual "hand-me-downs." The Government knew and until 1969 took an active hand in the administration of that information. After the 1969 Nixon "purge", administration was handled by an international board of directors in the private sector.
2. Nearly all "biomorphic" aerospace designs were inspired by the Roswell spacecraft — from Kelly's SR-71 Blackbird onward to today's drones, UCAVs, and aerospace craft.
3. It was Ben Rich's opinion that the public should not be told about UFOs and extraterrestrials. He believed they could not handle the truth — ever. Only in the last months of his decline did he begin to feel that the "international corporate board of directors" dealing with the "Subject" could represent a bigger problem to citizens' personal freedoms under the United States Constitution than the presence of off-world visitors themselves."

According to Don Phillips, Design Engineer, Lockheed, CIA, USAF:

"These UFOs were huge, and they would just come to a stop and do a 60-degree, 45-degree, 10-degree turn, and then immediately reverse this action". During the Apollo landing, Neil Armstrong says, "They're here. They are right over there and looking at the size of those ships, it is obvious they don't like us being here". "When I was working with the Skunkworks with Kelly Johnson, we signed an agreement with the government to keep very quiet about this."

"Anti-gravitational research was going on. We know that there were some captured craft from 1947 in Roswell, they were real. And, yes, we really did get some technology from them. And, yes, we really did put it to work. We knew each other from what we call an unseen industry. We can term it black, deep black, or hidden."

"The knowledge I have of these technologies came from the craft that were captured there. I didn't see the craft, nor did I see the bodies, but I certainly know some of the people that did. There was no question that there were beings from outside the planet."

"And if aliens were hostile, with their weaponry, they could have destroyed us a long time ago. We got these things that are handheld scanners that scan the body and determine what the condition is then we can also treat that condition from the same scanner."

"I can tell you personally that we've been working on them. And we have ones that can diagnose and cure cancer. One of the purposes I had for founding my technology corporation in 1998 was to bring forth these technologies that can clean the air and can help get rid of the toxins and help reduce the need for so much fossil fuel. Yes, it is time. I can tell you personally that it has already started."

Various insiders claim that Skunk Works has also made spacecraft capable of reaching other worlds. These witnesses to the secret space programs claim that Lockheed, Northrop Grumman, and various non-aerospace corporations all joined together to form an organization called the Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate (ICC). While the purpose of Solar Warden is the defense of the solar system, the objective of the ICC is trade.

According to secret space program insider Corey Goode, the ICC does trade from their bases on Mars with numerous extraterrestrial species. Apparently, human beings have a knack for engineering that is valuable to other species that have reached a level of development roughly comparable to our own.

These Mars bases are staffed by slaves who were taken from Earth in the 1970s and 1980s, and many of these slaves have now had children who are doomed to a life of abject servitude. In 2015, the British Interplanetary Society (BIS) held a distinctly odd meeting. Charles Cockell, the event organizer, led his fellow society members in a thought experiment to determine how best to depose a ruthless dictator of a Martian colony. Coincidentally, this event was held within days of Goode revealing the existence of a slave colony on Mars. Are there human colonies on Mars? Do these British elites know something that we don't?

The Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate (ICC) is a conglomerate of corporations from all over the world that build aerospace technologies. That is basically all of the corporations that have come together, pooled their resources, and created a vast infrastructure in our solar system. These corporations are primarily military defense contractors.

The looming threat of the Mars-German breakaway civilization sent a wave of urgency through secret government agencies on Earth. Thus, a massive clandestine buildup of advanced technology began, giving terrestrial-based governments a leg up in the secret space race. In order to secure such encroachments into the cosmos, new deals were made with the Mars-Germans and the Draco.

Following the German breakaway sorties of 1952, President Eisenhower signed a treaty with the German breakaway civilization in 1955 under their terms. This included the merging of the American military-industrial complex with the German military-industrial complex. This is the origin of the ICC. Under Operation Foothold, the ICC nuked millions of insectoids living inside of coveted lava tubes. The Brain Drain began shortly after. Engineers followed by other personnel were transferred to the new human colonies from Earth.

The ICC has also established bases on other planets within the local cluster for which the Draco gave them mining rights. One is in Aldebaran, and one is in the Pleiades. The ICC has over 100 colonies, bases, and industrial facilities/plants on the Moon, Main Asteroid Belt, Mars and several other moons and bodies in our solar system. There are also many free-floating space stations that have personnel manning them and are fully operational with space vessels docking with them on a regular basis.

The ICC has ongoing trade agreements with almost 900 civilizations and does occasional trade with far more than that. The massive ICC mining, industrial complex infrastructure of bases mine, smelt, engineer and construct many types of technologies for the other SSPs and for off-world allies, as well as their very large Colony and Exchange Systems for both Human and “Non-Humans”.

German Breakaway Civilization

The Vril Maidens channeled blueprints for time travel machines, anti-gravity technology, and more. Over the next decade this led to the development of the Vril and Haunebu series of anti-gravity flying saucers.

In the early 1930s, German occultist Maria Orsic allegedly contacted extraterrestrials while in a trance state. Orsic was a member of the Vril Society, which itself was an offshoot of the Thule Society. Both groups were involved in investigating the origins of the Aryan race, and Orsic supposedly received information on how to build an interstellar spaceship from extraterrestrials from Aldebaran, who claimed to be the progenitors of the Aryans.

After making contact with the extraterrestrials, Orsic transcribed the information in two different scripts. The first was a secret German Templar language that she did not personally understand. The second was an ancient language that historians commonly link to the German occult group known as the “Thule”. Most of these scholars agree that this language stems from ancient Sumeria, where the extraterrestrials once thrived.

Once the transcriptions were translated into German, the Vril were shocked. The ancient race had given Orsic extremely detailed instructions for constructing a flying saucer. It seems that Orsic was intent on communicating with the extraterrestrials in the Aldebaran solar system for a purpose. After receiving instructions for building a flying saucer, it makes sense that the Vril departed Earth for Aldebaran. This solar system exists in the Constellation of Taurus, which is 68 light-years away from Earth.

Those who believe Orsic departed Earth for Aldebaran argue that the top-tier members of the Vril Society, along with other German secret societies like the Thule, had adequate financing from Adolf Hitler's regime for the construction of flying saucers. After all, Germany's leading engineer, Werner Von Braun, made no secret of the fact that the Nazis received an abundance of technical information from extraterrestrials before and during World War II.

Another popular claim from Nazi Germany historians is that Orsic provided all of her channeled information to a rising star within the Nazi party named Rudolf Hess. According to this theory, Orsic supplied Hess with every last detail of her communications with the Vril as a means of expressing her German nationalism. Hess went on to become an influential figure in the Nazi party.

If theorists are correct, Hitler and his henchmen relied on Orsic's detailed channelings to create an array of flying saucers and other high-tech weapons for use in the war. These theorists also believe the Nazis funded millions of dollars to a top-secret program dedicated to mastering flight with flying saucers and other UFO-like aircraft.

A fellow German space pioneer named Hermann Oberth echoed Von Braun's claims that the Germans had knowledge of extraterrestrials. Oberth was one of the German Reich's top rocket designers during World War II. Though he moved on to work for the United States' space program's push to send men into outer space, Oberth is best remembered for his statements linking the Nazis to extraterrestrials.

According to Oberth, the Nazis could not "take credit" for their advancement in an array of scientific fields. Like Von Braun, Oberth claimed the Nazis received extensive assistance from a super-intelligent, alien life form. Oberth referred to these Vril aliens as "people of other worlds."

If one takes Oberth and Von Braun at their word, it becomes clear that the Nazi government obtained significant military assistance from highly advanced aliens. Many conspiracy theorists believe Maria Orsic's channelings served as the initial point of connection between Germans and these uber-intelligent extraterrestrials.

While Hitler believed that the Black Sun Society, a group controlled by the SS, had thoroughly infiltrated the Vril and Thule societies, it appears that Orsic had plans other than giving up control of her spacefaring capabilities to the warlike Third Reich.

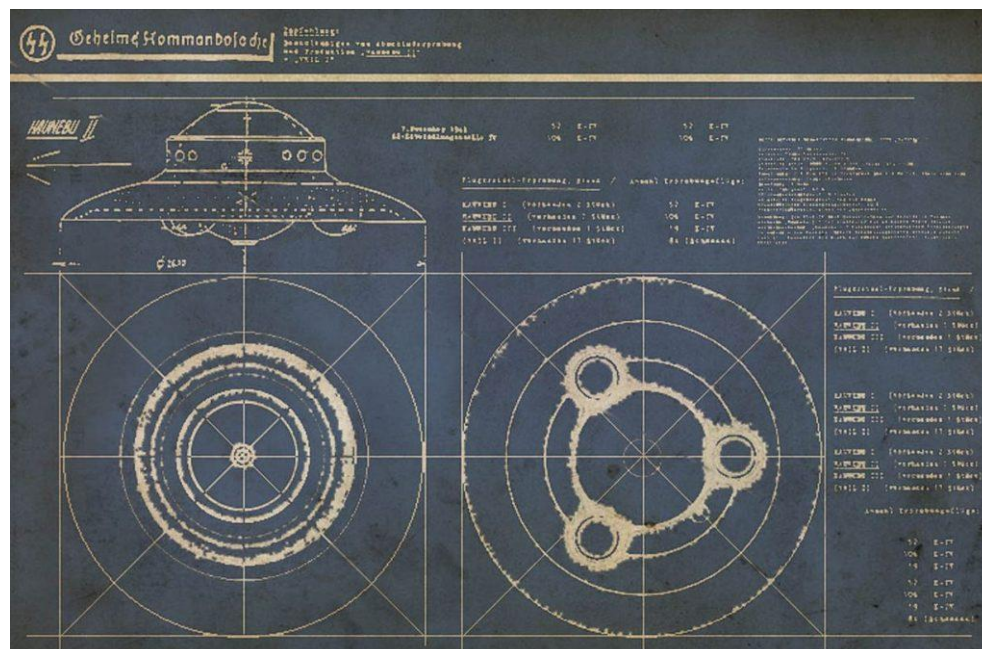

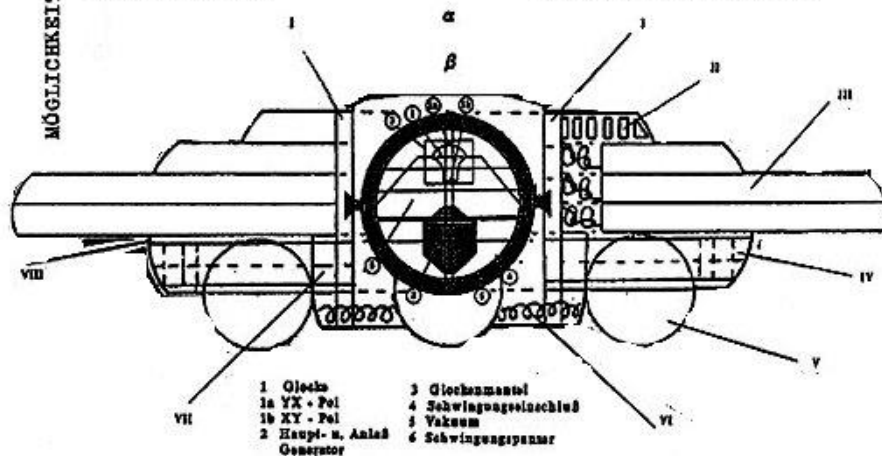

Orsic and her entire group disappeared without a trace in the final days of World War II, leading the occultists that she left behind to believe that she had successfully made the trip to Aldebaran in the ship that the Vril Society had constructed.

PROJEKT - FLUGKREISEL SCHRIEVER

The Dark Fleet and the Dracos

While the Vrili Society was more interested in peaceful space exploration, the Third Reich had a mind only for conquest. According to over a dozen supposed secret space program insiders, these militaristic ambitions were helped along greatly when the Nazis made contact with an extraterrestrial group called the Draco sometime in the 1930s.

When discerning common threads among the varying testimonies given by mediums, contactees, and insiders, it can be established that the Draco are an interplanetary empire that originated in the vicinity of the Orion constellation.

This empire is composed of a variety of different reptilian humanoid species, and the Draco are centrally controlled by a highly advanced artificial intelligence. According to secret space program lore, this artificial intelligence is from a different universe, and its sole purpose is to destroy and conquer all forms of biological life.

Various mediumistic channels, such as the creators of the Law of One book series, indicate that a basic blueprint of human life is encoded into the quantum framework of the galaxy itself. This prototype is transmitted to each star in the galaxy, and each star transmits this program to its planets.

Therefore, humanoid life is the norm in at least our galaxy, and this basic “five-star” archetype takes hold in whichever form of life becomes dominant on a given planet. The purpose of the artificial intelligence that has infested the Draco in the form of nanites is to pervert or invert this sacred image of advanced life that the Christian Bible refers to as the image of God.

Secret space program insiders speculate that cultural depictions of the Devil and demons originate from unconscious or lore-based knowledge of the Draco, and the insider community believes that the Draco subsist on something called “loosh.”

“Loosh” is a spiritual energy that is released by humanoid life forms that experience negative emotions or physical pain. Therefore, the elite caste in societies that have been infiltrated by the Draco turn traitor against their own species in order to engineer panoptic prisons that keep their fellow beings enslaved, terrified, ill, and ignorant.

These misanthropic priorities made the Draco and the Nazis a perfect match. The Nazis sought spacefaring capabilities, and the Draco sought a new species to add to their interstellar army. The Draco Empire, though constantly besieged by benevolent extraterrestrials, spans a great deal of territory throughout the galaxy.

The Dark Fleet, which is mainly composed of ethnic Germans, is used by the Draco to defend existing territory and conquer new planets in other star systems. While the Dark Fleet apparently has a sizeable presence here in the Sol System, their main forces are deployed in distant regions of the galaxy, where they join other captured races in the perennial task of expanding the slave empire of beings that many on our world would consider to be demons.

Draconian Federation Alliance

The Draconian Federation Alliance aims to recruit beings who are also negatively polarized and to and enslave those who are not polarized service-to-self. They “conquer planetary mind/body/spirit social complexes before they reach the stage of achieving social memory.”

There are a very few third density, a majority of fourth density, a similarly large number of fifth density, and very few sixth-density entities comprising this organization.

Their power matches that of the Confederation. Their numbers are one-tenth of theirs as the problem of spiritual entropy causes them to experience constant disintegration of their social memory complexes. They have “constant difficulty because of the concept of separation which is implicit in the manifestations of the service to self which involve power over others. This weakens and eventually disintegrates the energy collected by such mind/body/spirit complexes who call the Orion group and the social memory complexes which comprise the Orion group.”

They have a major stronghold in the constellation of Orion. They have had a presence in our solar system for about 375,000 years. They have a battle group stationed near the Trapezium cluster.

The Draco are a group of six different reptilian humanoid species. They have genetically intermingled so much that each of the six is actually a different gender, and they “trend” from male to female. These different “genders” can look like different species.

“The master race is white and twelve to thirteen feet tall. Another high-ranking group is sable-black. The warrior caste has wings and [mahogany] scales. They’re smaller and less muscular than the others. Others have skin that is a combination of tan and green scales.” The royal whites “traveled throughout the galaxy, looking for other humanoid groups that evolved out of reptilian life. Everywhere they found this life, they infiltrated, mixed their DNA together with them, and brought them into their Empire.”

They are very warlike and have been largely defeated throughout the galaxy already. Our Local Cluster is one of the only places left where they can live. They are utterly dependent upon our loosh for their survival. They range from 9 to 14+ feet tall.

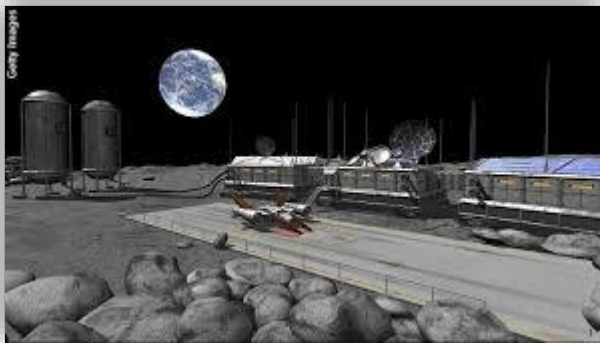

“There are two massive underground caverns in Antarctica that hold huge, highly populated cities of the Draco.” “The number of Draco in our solar system is comparable to Earth’s own visible population of 7 billion people.”

They have different castes within their system. They have a warrior caste. They have engineers, scientists, almost like a hive. And then they have their royalty up at the top that control and direct everything.

Project Moon Shadow

According to secret space program insider Randy Cramer, Project Moon Shadow was a MILAB program designed to train genetically augmented super soldiers. MILAB is a contraction of “military abduction,” and this term refers to a number of projects that were supposedly conducted to obtain and train assets, usually children, for the secret space programs.

Many of these projects assessed the eligibility of sensitive individuals for work as intuitive empaths, which is a position that involves interfacing with extraterrestrials who have evolved beyond the need for vocal utterances. Usually, these naturally born empaths were identified from a distance using reverse-engineered extraterrestrial technology. (I found this to be very interesting... The possibilities of the use of this technology by our government as well as how this was used by the aliens!)

The developers of Project Moon Shadow, however, genetically engineered embryos from the ground up that were then implanted into unwitting female hosts. These children would be born and live a few normal years before being brought aboard secret space program craft in the dead of night. They would then be flown to the Moon where they would participate in training exercises designed to bring out their latent abilities.

In sharp contrast to other MILAB programs, the training provided in Project Moon Shadow did not involve traumatizing experiences. According to Cramer, Project Moon Shadow consisted of 300 boys and girls who were trained in strategy, agility, and strength. Later, these genetically engineered child soldiers were given live weapons and trained alongside bemused adults.

According to the testimony of insiders such as Corey Goode and Tony Rodriguez, other MILAB programs exposed children to the absolute depths of horror. Children were raped and murdered in front of other children, MILAB participants were put into virtual reality scenarios in which they were pitted against monsters and forced to fight for their lives, and a general worship of occult practices was prevalent. Cramer was spared this hell, but he would soon find himself in a situation nearly as merciless.

Project Pegasus

Project Pegasus is a European black project operated under the Air Force Space Command, that has allegedly achieved successful teleportation to the moon and more notably, to Mars. Its success has furthered efforts at time travel. However, it is more likely that the test subjects (or victims) of Project Pegasus were really subjects of mind control. Although not confirmed, Pegasus may have been an experimental extension of Project MKUltra.

(Also check out our book on the beginning of mind control and teleportation, "The Montauk Project" described on page 154.)

Around 1947, teleportation research and development were formed by members from the Manhattan Project and the imported Germans under Operation Paperclip, who were enrolled as "War Department Special Employees".

In 1958, the Dwight D. Eisenhower administration, with Richard Nixon as Vice President, established both NASA and DARPA. In the interests of national security, all projects under the newly formed DARPA, were marked classified. In contrast to NASA, any achievements made by DARPA would not be known. Neither would it be known by all branches of the United States government.

As rocket research designs were being absorbed into NASA, teleportation research designs from the Manhattan/Paperclip teams were absorbed into an umbrella project under the Air Force. By 1961, NASA, in concert with the Air Force, was conducting rocket flight tests for the Apollo program.

After the Kennedy assassination, the Lyndon B. Johnson administration took office and the Air Force launched Project Pegasus. It conducted teleportation jump tests that led to a successful teleportation event in 1964. In 1965, NASA experienced major setbacks in the Apollo program requiring the attention of a Tiger team, while the Pegasus program took flight.

Under the Richard Nixon administration, the Pegasus program resulted in numerous successful human teleportations, which subsequently led to time travel in 1970. The pursuit of time-travel became of clear interest, so as to avert the threat of a Nuclear holocaust that was posed during the Cold War with the Soviet Union.

140 children were used in experimental jumps to Mars along with time-travel tests. They typically sent children because of design limitations that made it difficult for adults to jump. Any adults that actually managed the jumps, despite the limitations, suffered psychological trauma. Children seemed to psychologically adapt better to these jumps. However, the jumps were not always safe as one child returned from his temporal voyage before his legs. Alfred Webre reports, "He was writhing in pain with just stumps where his legs had been."

Washington-based attorney Andrew Basiago, a former child jumper, claims that future presidents like both Bushes, Clinton, and Barack Obama were also children who were involved in these experiments. Basiago claims that he was sent to several famous events in history like the Gettysburg Address and that he and some of the other children even met George Washington.

"Time Jumpers" are the participants who train for teleportation, that is performed from a "Jump Room". The following is a list of participants:

Andrew Basiago

Glenn Pruett

Raymond F. Basiago

William White Crow

Edward Teller, formerly from the Manhattan project; contributed to the US Space-Time program likely while at the University of Chicago as a professor, between 1947 and 1954.

Frederick Wilham August Cooper, under Operation Paperclip, contributed to the US Space-Time program after 1947.

Harold Agnew, formerly from the Manhattan project; contributed to the US Space-Time program likely while at the University of Chicago from 1947, in pursuit of his Master's degree; He may have revisited the program, contributing to Project Pegasus, as a member of the Defense Science Board from 1966 to 1970.

Howard Hughes was approached by key authorities of the space-time program in 1970. He is said to have been a technical advisor, consultant, and investor in Project Pegasus and helped to launch the "Stargate" portal in 1972.

Time travel black projects might be responsible for anomalies in the space-time continuum in both the past and future.

If an event in the past is altered, those surrounding the event may not even be aware that things around them have changed. Below is a list of events that might be symptoms of time-travel experiments:

The destruction of the Library of Alexandria, the largest and most significant libraries of the ancient world. There is no consensus to when it was destroyed. Proposed dates are: 48 BCE, c. 275 CE, 391 CE, or 642 CE

The plot to kill Jesus of Nazareth by Joseph Caiaphas, the major antagonist. Outside of the interactions with Jesus, little else is known about his tenure as Jewish high priest.

Phantom Time Hypothesis, 300 years of European history is missing, between 614 CE to 911 CE.

Andrew Basiago warned that there are some who are tempted by future viewings so as to profit from great gains. The following list highlights possible events:

1. The Soviet collapse
2. The Great recession of 2008
3. 9/11 attack on World Trade Center towers

Basiago's claims may have been ridiculed, but he isn't the only one who says to have traveled in time. Others include: John Titor, Sir Victor Goddard, and Pellegrino Ernetti.

Photos from the past and classic movies appear to feature people who have modern technology, such as a woman in an old movie with a cellphone, have raised more awareness towards this conspiracy.

20 & Back

The Navy made a deal with the Nordics so that they could covertly recruit more personnel into their secret space program. They were given new technology in order to accomplish this. As a compromise, the Navy could only enlist personnel for up to twenty years at a time.

Using this Nordic technology, they would then go through a pharmaceutical age-regression, have their mind blank-slated, and be portal led back to their point of origin, a few minutes after they were abducted. Similar programs exist or have existed on third density planets throughout the local cluster

The Navy top brass had been planning on developing it and had plans to implement it for a while, but it wasn't actually implemented until right after Solar Warden became active in 1984.

The 20 & Back is an offer normally made to military personnel, but they also need civilians to act as specialists. Only a very small percentage of civilian assets are used.

These are recruited for 18 months, four years, or eight years at a time. They are then either reassigned or returned to Earth. Some civilian scientists, engineers and technicians were being recruited from the past, since the dawn of the modern industrial age.

No one on a 20 & Back is allowed to interact with VIPs or interact with Earth after the time they were recruited. This countermeasure is taken to prevent the creation of a time paradox.

At the end of the 20 years, they have an option for another 20 years. The maximum number of 20 & Backs people are allowed to go through is three because everyone experiences mental deterioration during the third one.

U.S. inmates are eligible to be taken on a 20 & Back by the ICC/Dark Fleet without their consent, doing manual labor as a slave.

People who ended up getting scars due to traumatic incidents will receive ghost scars in the same areas after being age regressed.

Stargate

Stargate is Vorta teleportation / time travel stage used by Air Force Space Command.

Under the Richard Nixon administration, the United States Air Force discovered time travel through Project Pegasus. In 1970, the Air Force took an interest in Howard Hughes to help invest in the advancing of time travel with the creation of a large black time-gate.

Andrew Basiago referred to it as a "stargate". It was finally built in 1972. Under the Jimmy Carter administration, the project was masked by calling a Remote viewing program at Fort Meade, "Stargate Project". Meanwhile the Air Force, behind the scenes, out of the world's view, the Americans, and possibly with unified Soviets, conducted numerous teleportation jumps to Mars throughout the 1980s.

Vorta teleportation, or "Tesla teleportation" is a term used by Andrew Basiago to describe the type of teleportation that the Stargate uses. His reference to "Tesla" refers to Nikola Tesla for his research in the most important component that makes teleportation and time travel possible: "radiant energy." Tesla believed the 19th-century concept that an all-pervasive "ether" transmits electrical energy. If this theory is true, the same "ether" can transmit "radiant energy."

Jump Rooms

Project Pegasus developed teleportation "jump rooms" in the '60s, from early developments since 1947. The first teleportation event was conducted to Mars in 1964. Teleportations are conducted via a "jump room". Due to space and air constrictions, the maximum number of people that can jump at one time is three. It was typical to send just one or two people on a jump.

- 1964: unknown jumper; First teleportation event: Mars
- 1968 Nov/Dec: Andrew Basiago's first jump; cross-country
- 1980: Andrew Basiago; Parsons jobsite, Saudi Arabia; espionage mission
- 1984 May: Raymond F. Basiago; Mars jump

Time Travel - Teleportation

Time travel technology, known as the Chronovisor, was in its infancy since 1947, as a screen that was used to view repetitious past events. Known viewings were events surrounding Jesus of Nazareth, George Washington, and Abraham Lincoln. After the success of numerous teleportations in the 60s, time travel was finally incorporated into the teleportation jump scheme by 1970.

- 1971: Child team sent to civil war era; Gettysburg address
- 1971 summer: Andrew Basiago; Sent 30 minutes prior to Lincoln's arrival to theater.
- 1972: large black time-gate created.

Time Travel Cover-Up

DARPA has discovered time travel and is trying to cover it up. Andrew Basiago claims that the government has covered up time travel and that he was part of a series of experiments called Project Pegasus where they forced children into participating in time travel. The justification for the time-travel branch of Project Pegasus, was to mitigate the threat of a nuclear holocaust posed during the Cold war with the Soviet Union.

And now it has popped up that these Time travel black projects might be responsible for anomalies in the space-time continuum in both the past and future!

The Past: If an event in the past is altered, those surrounding the event may not even be aware that those things around them have changed. Below is a list of events that might have been affected by these time-travel experiments:

The destruction of the Library of Alexandria, the largest and most significant libraries of the ancient world. There is no consensus to when it was destroyed. Proposed dates are: 48 BCE, c. 275 CE, 391 CE, or 642 CE. That's quite a time-spread.

The plot to kill Jesus of Nazareth by Joseph Caiaphas, the major antagonist. Outside of the interactions with Jesus, little else is known about his tenure as Jewish high priest.

Did a phantom time irregularity cause 300 years to vanish? 300 years of European history is missing, between 614 CE to 911 CE

The Future: Andrew Basiago warned that there are some who are tempted by future viewings so as to make a great profit. The following list highlights opportunities for anomalous irresponsibility:

- The Soviet collapse
- The Great recession of 2008
- 9/11 attack on World Trade Center towers

While Basiago's claims of time-travel may have been ridiculed, he isn't alone to have presented claims of time-travel. He's joined the ranks of: John Titor, Sir Victor Goddard, and Pellegrino Ernetti.

Photos from the past and classic movies appear to feature people who have modern technology, such as a woman in an old movie with a cellphone, have raised more awareness towards this conspiracy. Although some of the objects in these old photos could be just mistaken identity of object, the ones I've seen are very convincing.

While we are discussing time anomalies, let's mess up our heads a little more...

The Phantom Time Hypothesis

When Dr. Hans-Ulrich Niemitz introduces his paper on the “phantom time hypothesis,” he requests patience, and understanding and for them to be open to radically new and highly unconventional ideas, as he introduces these three difficult-to-believe propositions:

- 1) Hundreds of years ago, our calendar was polluted with 297 years which never occurred
- 2) this is not the year 2005, but rather 1708
- 3) The purveyors of this hypothesis are not crackpots

The Phantom Time Hypothesis suggests that the early Middle Ages (614-911 A.D.) never happened but were added to the calendar long ago either by accident, by misinterpretation of documents, or by deliberate falsification by calendar conspirators.

This would mean that all artifacts ascribed to those three centuries belong to other periods, and that all events thought to have occurred during that same period occurred at other times or are outright fabrications.

Heribert Illig, one of the leading proponents of the theory, believes that Charlemagne was a fictional character. Is there any evidence to back up this theory?

It seems that historians are plagued by a plethora of falsified documents from the Middle Ages, and such was the subject of an archaeological conference in München, Germany in 1986. In his lecture there, Horst Fuhrmann, president of the Monumenta

Germaniae Historica, described how some documents forged by the Roman Catholic Church during the Middle Ages were created hundreds of years before their “great moments” arrived, after which they were embraced by medieval society.

This implied that whoever produced the forgeries must have very skillfully anticipated the future... or there was some discrepancy in calculating dates.

This was the first bit of evidence that roused Illig’s curiosity... he wondered why the church would have forged documents hundreds of years before they would become useful. So, he and his group examined other fakes from preceding centuries, and they “divined chronological distortions.” This led them to investigate the origin of the Gregorian calendar, which raised even more inconsistency.

In 1582, the Gregorian calendar we still use today was introduced by Pope Gregory XIII to replace the outdated Julian calendar which had been implemented in 45 BC. The Gregorian calendar was designed to correct for a ten-day discrepancy caused by the fact that the Julian year was 10.8 minutes too long.

But by Heribert Illig’s math, the 1,627 years which had passed since the Julian calendar started should have accrued a thirteen-day discrepancy... a ten-day error would have only taken 1,257 years.

So Illig and his group went hunting for other gaps in history and found a few. For example, a gap of building in Constantinople (558 AD – 908 AD) and a gap in the doctrine of faith, especially the gap in the evolution of theory and meaning of purgatory (600 AD until ca. 1100).

From all of this data, they have become convinced that at some time, the calendar year was increased by 297 years without the corresponding passage of time.

Sometimes a hypothesis which challenges convention can be alluring, particularly when it could plausibly fit most of the facts.

But all of the evidence presented by Illig and his group (mostly written in German) is circumstantial at best. Although their hypothesis raises some interesting questions and points out some inconsistencies in history, is it necessary to accept these bizarre conclusions? What about the conclusion that Otto III modified the calendar so that his reign would include the year 1000 AD, because this would put him in his God’s good graces according to his understanding of Christian millenarianism?

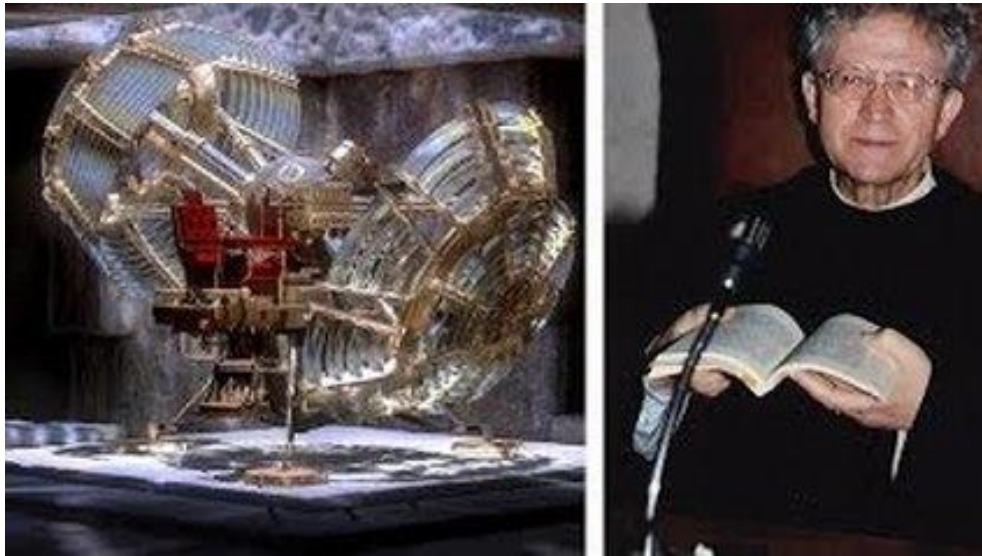

In the face of similar changes made over the years by those who rule over us, just to justify their existence and further their hold over us, this doesn’t seem so outlandish to me. What about claims that large parts of the Bible were rewritten, removed or added to make their official ideas more acceptable and believable to the masses.

Ok, before I start to fall for the missing time conspiracy, let’s discuss a scientific challenge to it...

One way to disprove phantom time is to look at astronomical records. Throughout history, humans have recorded major astronomical events. We have, for example, observations of solar eclipses from both before and after the early Middle Ages. Pliny the Elder mentions a solar eclipse in 59 AD, which agrees with our current dates. Astronomical observations of the Tang Dynasty also confirm our current date. So, what are to believe?

More on the Chronovisor

A Chronovisor is a theoretical time viewer, initially of past events. François Brune claims that Pellegrino Ernetti was a developer of the Chronovisor that enabled the viewing of the crucifixion of Jesus. Andrew Basiago claims that DARPA vastly improved Chronovisor technology.

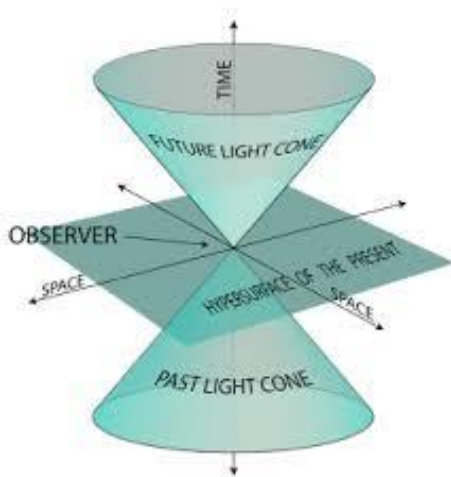

Pellegrino Ernetti, an Italian Roman Catholic Benedictine monk, claimed to have witnessed the crucifixion of Jesus through the "Chronovisor". He leaked information about this device to François Brune and embellished the story that he had invented it. Although he may have had a part in advancing its application, Ernetti was most likely not its inventor.

Circumstantial evidence suggests that the Chronovisor was originally an artifact from an unknown source, that was used for time-viewing. The artifact was highly modifiable, because in the decades to follow, it was redesigned for time travel application. The Chronovisor was the subject of a study by key members from the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, which may have included Agostino Gemelli, and the Los Alamos National Laboratory team, from at least 1947.

Physicist Enrico Fermi's contribution to modifying the Chronovisor may have been with the use of the FERMIAC, an analog computer invented by Fermi, to aid in his studies of neutron transport.

Fermi's late research in Rayleigh–Taylor instability may also have contributed to time-travel research and development. If Wernher von Braun was advised of the chronovisor, it probably wasn't until around 1954. Likely by 1959, the chronovisor was then absorbed into the DARPA program. It was radically improved in the coming decades. Andrew Basiago, a former participant in the Project Pegasus program, has described its 40-year evolution.

Archaeologist Jonathan Gray claimed that sound that emitted from the "ancient projector" during temple rituals while following image movements, produced an emotional effect. Gray's description of this ancient device is comparable to Andrew Basiago's description of the Chronovisor in its semi-original form from the Los Alamos National Laboratory team. It too projected images on a display screen.

The Chronovisor may have been a variant of this "ancient device" that Jonathan Gray describes in his book, Dead Man's Secrets. The study teams had modified it by building a large cabinet and using cathode-ray tubes for the viewing of received events on a display screen.

It is also claimed that a control panel with a series of buttons and levers was also added for selecting the time and location to be viewed. It was also known to locate and track specific individuals. According to Ernetti, it worked by receiving, decoding and reproducing the electromagnetic radiation left behind from past events. It could also pick up the audio component or sound waves emitted by these same events.

Savvy researchers may agree that, while time travel may indeed be possible, the Chronovisor is not necessarily a medium for it. Physicist and cosmologist Stephen Hawking has discussed the possibilities of time travel, explaining in one instance, "If we want to travel into the future, we just need to go fast. Really fast. And I think the only way we're ever likely to do that is by going into space."

Physicist Fred Alan Wolf has suggested that time travel is possible because "it really has to do with a rather delicate relationship that exists between mind and matter... What time travel is really all about is learning how to move in and out of that realm where things get defined by the mind."

Unfortunately, Ernetti never provided a detailed explanation as to how his time travel device was fashioned or how it worked, except to mysteriously claim that it ran by "processing residual electromagnetic radiation left over by numerous processes."

(Note that the Chronovisor appears to be similar the Yellow Book device which contained information on the history of aliens on Earth and much more. Further information on this book can be found on page 154.)

Global Galactic League of Nations

It is widely believed in the insider community that the Roswell UFO Incident was indeed an instance of a crashed extraterrestrial spacecraft. American aerospace contractors and the Nazi scientists involved in Operation Paperclip were tasked with reverse-engineering this craft to produce usable technology. The craft that have been reproduced from the Roswell crash and other similar incidents are known as alien reproduction vehicles (ARVs). The TR-3B is a commonly sighted ARV that has often been mistaken for a real alien craft.

The United States, however, wasn't the only superpower to find the wreckage of alien craft. According to insider lore, much of the information received by the American military-industrial complex regarding UFOs was transmitted by captured Nazi assets who had helped reverse-engineer ancient Vimana craft that the Vril and Thule societies had found in the Himalayas. These reproduction Vimanas had been operational since the 1930s, giving German scientists a leg up in the UFO game that made them into hotly contested prizes at the end of World War II.

However, the Soviets didn't need German scientists to tell them all the secrets of extraterrestrial craft. According to various insiders, Stalin found a crashed ship of his own in Siberia that he tasked Soviet scientists to reverse engineer. The result of this initiative was a craft called the Cosmosphere, which caught the attention of American military assets in the early 1950s.

The presence of these one-to three-man flying silver spheres in the skies as the Americans were getting their own fledgling secret space program off the ground ultimately led to the formation of the Global Galactic League of Nations. Russia, China, the United States, and Germany were the core members of this group, but other nations were given token membership in exchange for keeping quiet about the UFO phenomenon. Member nations also agreed to hand over any crashed UFOs to the American or Soviet governments.

According to secret space program insiders, American and Russian assets worked together throughout the entirety of the Cold War despite the narrative that was sold to the masses, and the superpowers of the world continue to collaborate on secret space program agenda items with no concern given to the theatrics regularly employed to keep the people of the world entertained and distracted.

Just like our Secret Government which continues with its plans to control the operation of our country without interruption, regardless who fills the elected seats of power. Can you imagine what would happen to this country if it was actually controlled by the politicians?

Earth Alliance

Various insiders have now revealed that highly sensitive information on extraterrestrials and the secret space programs is often disclosed as fiction in movies and books. In this way, those who have been able to pull the wool over our eyes are able to accuse anyone who comes forward with the truth as misconstruing fiction with reality or stealing their ideas from TV shows. Plus, it's true that reality is stranger than fiction, and strangeness sells.

(Interestingly, an MD who read about pharmaceutical drugs introduced to us in the past by an alien culture in my "Blue Planet Lost Chapters Book" made a big commotion in an Amazon book review of the book claiming they were Star Trek medicines because they were not exactly like medicines used by today's medical world. "Starts with a bunch of chemical formulas and names attached to supposed medications used by aliens. As a physician, I was curious, because I didn't recognize any of them. Googled a number of them-turns out they are names of medications used on Star Trek episodes, for God's sake!")

It appears this tactic was undertaken to cover the tracks of the Earth Alliance. In the television show Babylon 5, the Earth Alliance is an open confederation of human governments that was formed to protect the planet. According to insider lore, the real Earth Alliance serves a similar function, but its actions are accomplished in secret.

The Earth Alliance arose in opposition to what most insiders call the Cabal. This name was chosen because the members of the Cabal prefer to call themselves the Illuminati, which means the “illuminated ones.”

According to the Earth Alliance, however, this group is not illuminated at all and has in fact been responsible for casting the denizens of our planet into a dark pit of disease, war, political disenfranchisement, civic unawareness, and wage slavery. The Cabal has been controlled by the Draco for centuries, and it is this alliance that is responsible for the commonly made connection between occult practices and “Devil worship.”

The Earth Alliance has been working in the shadows to undo the Cabal’s efforts to plunge humanity into an eternal darkness of massive depopulation and open technocratic rule. Members of the Earth Alliance have infiltrated the militaries of the United States, China, Russia, and other countries, and insider Corey Goode has unequivocally stated that the Earth Alliance has supported President Donald Trump since the beginning of his candidacy.

Now it gets stranger... Author Jerome Corsi has expanded on this point by relaying that factions in the US military recruited Donald Trump to run for president of the United States with their assurances that any efforts to rig the election would be nullified.

This position has been confirmed by the anonymous intel source “QAnon” that many believe to be comprised of the same members of military intelligence that got Trump elected.

Although I haven’t seen any proof of this, it was claimed that the Earth Alliance showed its true strength when a small fleet of Dark Fleet craft attempted to leave the planet from their hiding place in Antarctica. Before this event, no one knew that the Earth Alliance had developed their own secret space program, but apparently a fleet of fighter-size spacecraft appeared from nowhere and inflicted critical damage on the fleeing Dark Fleet ships.

As the Earth Alliance continues to perform operations on and below the Earth’s surface to free mankind from Cabal and Draco rule, it seems that they have also been inducted into the brotherhood of the secret space programs.

Military Industrial Complex Secret Space Program

While the members of the Earth Alliance, the Global Galactic League of Nations, and even the Cabal all agree that the secrets of the clandestine space programs, extraterrestrial contact, and suppressed technologies should be disclosed to the people of the world, there is some contention over how this feat should be accomplished.

The Cabal wants to release this information over the course of generations. They are attempting to gradually engineer global society into a state in which this sort of revelation would only cement the role of the Cabal as absolute and eternal overlords over mankind. The Earth Alliance wants full disclosure to occur now so that humanity can reap the benefits of free or zero-point energy, superluminal spaceflight, and advanced medical technologies, but they are fully aware that such a divulgence would entirely crash the current global economic system and engender total worldwide chaos until a new order could be established.

The Earth Alliance and the Cabal both intend to use a third faction known as the Military Industrial Complex Secret Space Program (MIC SSP) as a steppingstone toward full disclosure. On page 334 of The Reagan Diaries, it is revealed that President Reagan had been briefed on June 11, 1985, on the American space program's capability of putting 300 people in orbit. It goes without saying that such a figure would be ludicrous to consider even today on the basis of publicly revealed information.

(We must always look beyond the publicly released information to find the truth!)

However, it appears that black budget programs within the Air Force have been developing clandestine aerospace craft for at least the last 30 years. According to various insiders, films like The Avengers series have served as orchestrated facets in the effort to gradually acclimate the public to the existence of suppressed technology. This practice of seeding hidden truths into mass media productions is called predictive programming, and is it also used by the Cabal to hijack our consciousness?

Even the most elevated members of the MIC SSP have no idea what is truly going on in the cosmos. There are bases on the Moon, Mars, and in Earth orbit, but they have no contact with extraterrestrials and believe that their level of knowledge is the absolute truth. It is believed that releasing information on clandestine aircraft such as the TR-3B and flying aircraft carriers could prime the public for further disclosures of a more powerful nature.

The Cabal also intends to ignite this disclosure process if they ever feel their rule to be severely threatened, which has led many to believe that recent disclosure efforts enacted by Tom DeLonge and various high-level aerospace and military personnel have been a front for the psychological warfare operations of an increasingly cornered Cabal.

Secret Space Program Alliance

Information released by numerous secret space program insiders: The Earth Alliance has a counterpart beyond the terrestrial sphere. This organization is known as the Secret Space Program Alliance (SSP Alliance), and it is comprised of a variety of constituent members such as Solar Warden, the ICC, and the Global Galactic League of Nations. Though the SSP Alliance is composed almost entirely of members that spend most of their time off planet, this organization is still highly involved in Earthly affairs.

The SSP Alliance represents the top of the totem pole in the secret space program hierarchy. This group has been afforded a seat at the so-called Super Federation, which is composed of over 60 extraterrestrial species that have been conducting experiments on Earth's human, animal, and plant life. The SSP Alliance has also made contact with the Galactic Federation, which is composed of hundreds of different benevolent extraterrestrial races.

This organization has also had contact with a society of hyper-advanced human beings who live under the Earth's surface in vast climate-controlled chambers capable of supporting human life. This society is composed of multiple groups that have branched off from the natural development of human life on Earth, and the lead group, known as the Anshar, claim to have traveled back in time from our future in order to maintain an ideal timeline.

The SSP Alliance essentially holds the reins of the various benevolent secret space programs that operate in and around the Sol System. This group desperately wants humanity to gain access to information and technologies that have been hidden by the Cabal, and many within the SSP Alliance are actively preparing mankind to ride the wave of enhanced consciousness that these societal changes will bring.

Though belief systems regarding this event vary within the SSP Alliance, most members believe that an upcoming electromagnetic shift in solar dynamics will actuate a quantum leap in human awareness. It is widely believed that the latent talents inherent to human consciousness have been willfully suppressed by malign actors, and the members of the SSP Alliance have united to sweep away this vestigial husk of corruption and usher in a new golden age for all of mankind.

The Anshar

The Anshar are a 4th density ancient breakaway civilization. They are humans from the future. In their original timeline, during their transition to fourth density, they began to experience a “Mandela effect.”

They travelled back in time to 17-18 million BCE to the effects point of origin to maintain their timeline. A small contingent travelled back in time to the effect's point of origin as a lynchpin. This small population expanded drastically over millions of years. Another contingent travelled back in time to the current fourth density shift. Their population is currently in the millions.

The elders have a device that enables them to fly like Superman. The Anshar “sleep” by spending forty minutes every few days in an egg-shaped chair. These chairs allow one to access their neural network.

The elders are about two feet taller than the rest of the Anshar. Like the Tall Whites, they go through a second phase of growth. They fly most of the time.

The Anshar have a historic connection to ancient human settlements in Antarctica, before the most recent pole shift.

The Anshar were one of the groups interacting with the ancient Sumerians to assist them in the recovery of their civilization after the great catastrophe that destroyed Atlantis.

The Anshar are karmically tied to Earth humans. Therefore, we act as an anchor for their evolutionary progress. If humans don't choose the optimal temporal reality, the Anshar could cease to exist. To help guide us to the optimal temporal reality, the Anshar have been reaching out telepathically to humans on the surface in order to raise their vibrations.

The Anshar reside inside a gigantic cavern underneath central South America.

They fly buses as well as cigar-shaped, egg-shaped, and saucer-shaped craft. Their craft as well as all of their technology is powered by the mass consciousness of their civilization.

In the Anshar city, there are areas around the cavern that look like they were dematerialized to make room for living quarters. The rock that was removed appears to have been recycled and liquified to construct the tall glass buildings. All of their buildings are modular

At the end of each major cycle, the Anshar, as well as all of the ancient breakaway civilizations, move all of their people and all of their buildings into a temporal anomaly they generate in the middle of their cities. This is to protect the Anshar from disappearing due to divergence from their timeline.

They have a park where many of the creatures that roamed the Earth while the Anshar lived on the surface are preserved.

The Anshar sustain themselves on plant and fungus life. They have a large garden, many acres in size, where all of their food is grown. All of their food is grown in a crystal substrate. Mineral-enhanced water is used to grow their crops. They eat raw vegetables and vegetarian sweet cakes. Because their food is very high in nutrients, you immediately feel energized after eating it.

Their library is like a time machine. As you walk from one end of it to the other, tablets become scrolls which become handwritten books which become modern-day books. All of the modern books had ISBN numbers on them. They have physical copies of books that are the most important to them. Everything else is stored in crystals. Not only do the Anshar keep a close eye on our written works, but they also browse our internet.

The Anshar have one area reserved for influencing thoughts and making telepathic contact with surface humanity. This room is filled with eggshell-shaped seats for the Anshar to sit down on and enter into a meditative state.

MILAB

"In the early years of MILAB "Training" there is contact with a few types of "Non Humans" that do a number of things to the "Subjects" among them to cause "Entity Attachment's" to occur which act as "Gate Keepers" to memories (Or whatever they are made to do) as well as to cause the subjects to get caught in cycles of self-destructive behavior that keeps them "manageable" and allows them to best control them through the programmed "Triggers" of "Reactionary Behavior" towards others or even suicidal impulses towards themselves."

"As far as the children are concerned that were rejected, they are blank slated and returned to their "Normal Lives"... They are somewhat kept an eye on and if they show any signs of abilities or remembering they are re-abducted and blank slated again. It seems that subconsciously they have a feeling of "Rejection" that they carry with them and do not know why for the rest of their lives. It could affect them for their lifetime, depending on how long they were in a program (and what was experienced) before being released."

They monitor people, as well, afterwards. So, kind of like the NSA, you know, the haystack kind of thing. They pull all of your information in, and they have behavioral scientists that will look for any signs that the programming is breaking down. If so, they'll pick you up, bring you back in, debrief you to see exactly what you do know, and then blank slate them.

Project Mannequin

A global augmented soldier program. It takes soldiers trained in MILAB programs and parcels them either to a terrestrial unit or to Lunar Operations Command, where they will be given individual assignments within Earth Defense Force (EDF). EDF parcels its soldiers to Radiant Guardian or to private military contractors like Mars Defense Force

Bases that Support the Secret Space Program

The American Base in Antarctica

The secret American Antarctic Base is an integral part of America's network and linked via satellite to Pine Gap and other bases in Australia, Christchurch in New Zealand, Punta Arenas in Southern Chile and the long standing C.I.A./NSA base in Cape Town, South Africa.

Large trenches were mined in which buildings were placed in neat rows, then covered with deep ice and snow, due to the natural ice buildup. Due to the large airspaces in the trenches, now tunnels, the ambient temperature of the air was raised to above freezing level without effecting the surrounding ice. This combined with the individual heated buildings make it a comfortable place to live.

The main purpose of the base appears to be top secret experimentation in the area of electromagnetism and the earth's magnetic field. An Australian scientist with the Southern Lights research team at the main Australian Antarctic Base, situated at Mawson revealed some of the American activities there. He said that when they conducted their regular experiments, big changes occurred in the Aurora and communications were affected.

He believed they were driving electromagnetic energy into the earth's magnetic field which was causing the disruption in the Aurora and probably related to the HAARP experiments in Alaska as the effects on the Northern Lights were similar.

Tidbinbilla Tracking Station

Located close to Canberra, Australia, this may be the most important base in Australia, being a vital control center for the Hubble orbital telescope. The first images received by Tidbinbilla showed that virtually every star has a solar system. For some reason this revelation angered the American control-room staff because the Australians and British now knew this secret. Hubble photographs are now airbrushed before release.

The Parkes Radio telescope in Parkes, Australia was the primary receiver of Apollo 11 TV transmissions. And a government source revealed that The Parkes Radio Telescope first detected intelligent signals from outer space more than twenty-five years ago. It has been involved with the SETI program. Parkes hit rate was alarmingly high, so the plug had to be pulled in 1995 before too much leaked out.

Intelligent radio and television signals were identified in several parts of the galaxy and emanating from areas up to three thousand light years away from the earth. It's classified above top secret that technical civilizations equal or superior to our own were very active more than three thousand years ago.

Amazingly, they captured and still continue to capture enhanced television pictures showing the daily life of a number of alien civilizations, even some from ages past!

Tracking Deep Space Activities: Those in the know claim that the real secret is at the Tidbinbilla tracking station, outside Canberra, not Alice Springs.

Known as The Canberra Deep Space Communication Complex (CDSCC) at Tidbinbilla besides controlling and tracking military satellites it is also involved in deep space vehicle control. CDSCC is responsible for the tracking of spacecraft that partake in interplanetary missions. The Complex is a NASA facility operated under a USA-Australian Government agreement which involves JPL, CSIRO Australia and British Aerospace Australia.

Reports coming in from Tidbinbilla, by someone who worked there, claimed they were involved in weather control, UFOs, killer satellites and much more. There is a huge high-tech James Bond type operation hub in Canberra.

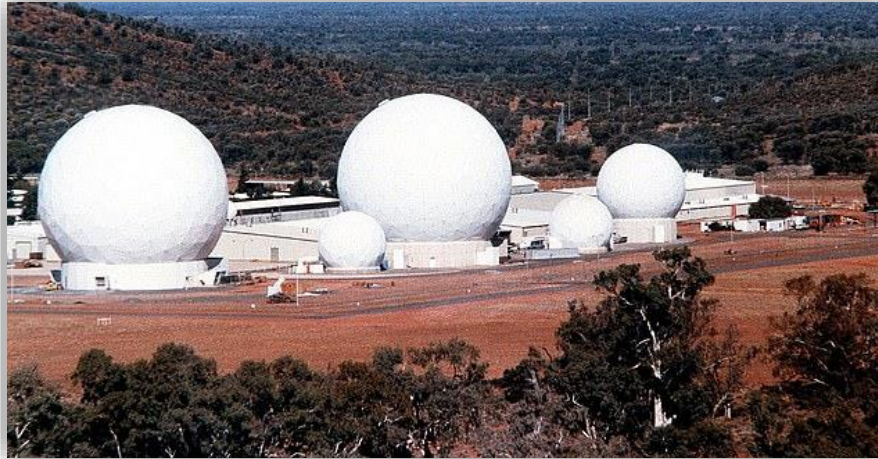

It has been reported that several times, locals have seen white disks about 30' in diameter being unloaded from large US cargo planes at the airports serving Pine Gap with the USAF emblem on them. It seems likely that disks are assembled and based at Pine Gap because many disks seen at night would confirm this.

Nexus magazine says there are over 48 years of SIGINT (satellite signal intelligence) As well as communications interception and satellite spying, and there is also an interest in undersea activities. Could it have something to do with the over 1,400 alien bases here on this planet including many undersea bases? The NSA which runs this controls thousands of electronic intercept stations. The primary purpose for creating the NSA was to decipher alien communications, language and establish dialogue.

Joint Defense Facility Pine Gap (JDFPG)

This is a US satellite surveillance base and Australian Earth station south-west of the town of Alice Springs, Northern Territory in Australia; previously, it was known as Joint Defense Space Research Facility. The station is partly run by the CIA, NSA, NRO and is a key contributor to the NSA's global interception effort, which included the ECHELON program.

The facilities at the base consist of a massive computer complex with 38 radomes protecting radio dishes and has over 800 employees. NSA employee David Rosenberg indicated that the chief of the facility was a senior CIA officer at the time of his service there.

The location is strategically significant because it controls United States spy satellites as they pass over one-third of the globe.

Mind Control and Surveillance

Using Mind Control on Humans at Pine Gap

An Australian newspaper wrote way back in 1974 that US has been carrying out research into electromagnetic propulsion (EMP) at Pine Gap since 1966 and that security about this project has resulted in hypnotic and post hypnotic keys being implanted in personnel prior to their acceptance into this project.

It has been revealed that the Pine Gap employees working on the base, and especially those earmarked for duty on electromagnetic propulsion projects, have undergone brainwashing and even implantation of intracranial devices.

The most powerful mind-control is still trauma-based built on a foundation of multiple personalities which are dissociated personalities and parts of the mind. It appears that electronic mind-control is being overlaid on top of this.

The victim's consciousness is not able to think past the electronic mind-control which catches their undivided attention, being too distracted to deal with the deeper issues of trauma-based mind-control. Instructions can enter someone's mind through their implant.

At the NRO's major massive beast computer center in Alaska in the 1970's, an engineer who was in charge of building and getting the center operational, revealed the site's capabilities. They also had one in South Africa and one in Pine Gap. These three sites formed a triangle on the globe, and couldn't be located anywhere else, due to the naturally occurring lines of force of the planet.

Are Supercomputers Controlling Us and Our Reality?

Al Bielek said that the aliens gave the info to build Cray computers at Montauk, which were used to create time portals. It was a computer that sent Edward and Duncan Cameron back to 1943 to destroy the ship Eldridge. He says the radio frequency operating at Montauk was 435 MHz which is the frequency for the entire universe. This frequency was used to create time/space tunnels to Mars.

Extremely advanced technology was used by Dr John von Neumann and 3 scientists including 2 from the future to put earth on another timeline in 1963. Montauk has major timelines running through it. Power stations are built on gridlines deliberately. There is evidence that technology is being used to shift earth onto another timeline.

Today's computers are much better at speech than those used in 1973. They can hear human voices; determine what language it is and answer in it. Today they can link directly to thousands of mind-controlled slaves and via various methods almost instantly control their behavior. It is totally mind-boggling what is available today to control us humans. Super computers connected to HAARP transmitter sites and satellite systems and no telling what is in use by the government now!

The Thought Police

An anonymous government source says the human brain, if it has a memex brain implant they control, can interface with a supercomputer which acts as a vast repository of human knowledge as well as answering questions to essentially all previously answered questions instantaneously.

If the human brain has some type of virtual reality holodeck attachment, the computer can even walk the slave through a realistic setting indistinguishable from the real world. He goes on to say that one victim has ELF & VLF waves of 435 and 1080 MHz signals targeted on her.

(435 is in the 400-450 MHz band which is the window to the human consciousness, and 1080 is in the 1000 to 1200 MHz band.) 435 MHz is converted to 1080 by interaction with the high-atmosphere HAARP project.

Satellite Mind Control

Government agencies can use infrasound laser weapons coming from remote satellites to cause illness and pain to targeted individuals. Visual holograms and blurred vision can also be affected by satellite lasers. They can also use neurophones, which is a device to convert sound to electrical impulses.

A directional satellite laser or microwave can target an individual's nervous system and it can enter the brain as voice threats or noise. These can come from any direction and can be perceived as ghosts, God's voice, aliens, Satan or laughing.

Silent subliminal words can target people too, to make them think thoughts are their own. Brain wave scanners can mind read by training a satellite onto someone's head and scanning its magnetic field. Patterns which show particular emotions can be read and more can be sent back to change the emotional/psychological state.

EEG results of computerized brainwave scanning can be relayed to US government faculties, and the thoughts can be interpreted instantaneously, with a brain wave vocabulary, developed from the CIA's LSD experiments.

Remote torture or interrogation can be carried out by staff at computers thousands of miles away. Psychic phenomena and "coincidences" can be arranged using brain-scanning technologies. Could every citizen be brainwave scanned by the Echelon program at Pine Gap and thoughts suppressed?

Only those "in" with them would profit and only those who questioned nothing would escape scrutiny. No military or federal law enforcement would be necessary.

Echelon Program

Advances in both computer technologies and telecommunications mean that ECHELON has evolved through the years. And not for the better.

Today, the network is believed to capture large volumes of data in multiple ways as part of an upstream surveillance effort:

- Terrestrial radio antennae intercept satellite transmissions.
- Satellites dip into transmissions between cities.
- Many sites around the world tap into communications conducted via wires.
- Sniffing devices are installed at key internet routing centers, to catch addressing information from the packets of data passing through.
- Data travelling along fiber-optic network cables is not safe either. The NSA and GCHQ deploy devices that can tap such cables.

Needless to say, this results in an enormous amount of data that is being constantly collected on a global scale.

A large computer network, called XKeyscore, is believed to be used in order to examine the information that ECHELON hoovers up in bulk every day.

This system looks for keywords, phrases, names, addresses, and other details that the intelligence agencies deem pertinent. The Five Eyes can then build profiles of contact networks and delve into the specific communication histories of those considered to be of interest.

Part of the source code for XKeyscore was made public by German broadcaster, Norddeutscher Rundfunk and, when analyzed by experts, it revealed some startling results.

Simply conducting an online search for privacy-enhancing software tools highlighted in the XKeyscore rules is enough to get the NSA to mark and track your IP address.

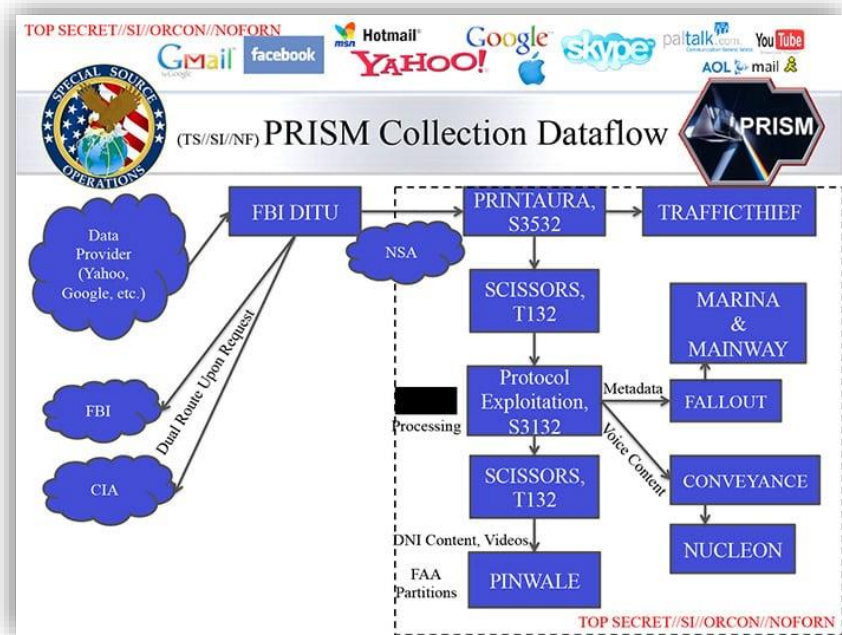

The source code also shows that the NSA tracks privacy software users worldwide.

PRISM

After the 2013 Snowden leaks, two types of surveillance became public knowledge. They are understood to be the main spying methods used by intelligence agencies in the Five Eyes alliance. These two distinct methods are called Upstream and PRISM. You may also hear PRISM referred to as downstream.

Upstream surveillance involves directly collecting communication data as it travels over the internet. This is the type of bulk operation carried out by programs like ECHELON.PRISM, on the other hand, is the collection of communication data from big tech companies.

What this essentially means is that Five Eyes intelligence agencies can go directly to the Googles, Facebooks, and Yahoos of the world, and force them to provide communication records involving people of interest.

Unfortunately, this can also include communications with regular citizens. The companies are then prohibited from telling their users that their data has been turned over to the government.

TEMPORA

A newcomer to the world of mass surveillance programs, it only became operational in 2011.

Tempora is the code name for a computer system used by the GCHQ to intercept personal data travelling along fiber-optic cables.

The information it is able to snipe and store includes:

- Recordings of phone calls
- Content of email messages
- Entries on Facebook
- Browsing history of any internet user

Tempora is a GCHQ program for physically tapping fiber-optic cables to collect data in bulk. The program collects content and metadata that travels over fiber-optic cables around the world. The program taps at least 200 cables at various locations.

It stores the collected data in a buffer to enable retrospective analysis. Content is stored for three days, and metadata for 30 days.

This program incorporates bulk data from the INCENSER program. Data collected is shared with the NSA through the WINDSTOP program and can be analyzed using the XKEYSCORE search interface and a search language called GENESIS.

The Fourth Density

OK, now that your mind is swirling from what you just read about what is going on in this world as well other worlds, realize that some of these changes are positive. For example, you may soon begin to enter the Fourth Density. But don't worry, just make sure your seat belt is fastened!

Many of us have recently began to feel the changes that are surrounding us as well as changes inside us.

This is what is now being referred to as transforming into "Fourth Density." You still have a physical, human-looking body — only at its core it is more energetic and capable. Your fourth-density body will be far more telepathic, will have an awareness of the afterlife and reincarnation, and will have the potential for great feats like telekinesis and levitation.

Our everyday waking awareness will have elements that are similar to a psychedelic experience, which we will need to learn to adapt to. I, as some others I know are beginning to feel these changes, experience new powers and abilities as well as the strength to control these newfound powers and use them for positive outcomes.

This will allow us to become aware of cosmic disclosure — and to discover who we really are and what is really going on in our worlds!

With these changes we will be able to look at things differently. To understand what is really going on around us, to not be fooled by the controllers, to see the bigger picture, and to have a grasp of what is happening on a galactic level not just earthly or regionally.

This is commonly referred to as the Fourth Density, but it really doesn't matter what it is called, it's beyond any earthly titles, and I will be devoting more time in the future to trying on this new density and learning to help others with this.

The fourth density shift that is happening right now has been happening for a while. More and more people are waking up to it than ever before.

More of us are having spiritual awakenings as well as gaining understanding about how reality works, how their thoughts correlate with what they experience, understanding that a lot of the structures that are in place, government, political, maybe even religions. Whatever you call it, these aren't necessarily working out in our best interests and that is causing many people on the planet to wake up right now. And maybe you've already noticed it in your life.

That is one of the main reasons that many of us chose to be here right now is because of this density shift. Maybe consciously, we don't remember selecting this time to return, but, If we were to get down to our subconscious or a higher self, whatever name we want to call it, we would see it.

We are moving into a new way of being. The third density is a lot about matter, about this physical structure that we're in, identifying with our bodies, with that, of making things happen, the willpower control. These are all aspects of the third density, and we are now moving into this fourth density.

Fourth density is when we are more into the heart, more into understanding that things are less physical than we earlier thought. This is where reality becomes more of a dream as well because then things become more flexible.

We move from identifying so much with our ego, our physical form and move into the fourth density where we start to see that things that we thought were separate, such as the ego structures that we have, now we realize that we're all connected, we realize more about how reality works. We have realized that we will start to connect to each other and that collectively how we connect to each other is going to determine which realities we experience in our life.

What we're beginning to realize now is that not only do our thoughts correlate with what we experienced, but what you put out comes back to you because what you do to someone else you do to another aspect of yourself, because we're all connected in this cosmic web!

We are doing this as a planet and it is the main reason that almost everyone is here, whether they're aware of it or not. That's why there are 7 billion people here on this planet right now and everyone is trying to incarnate here because these collective shifts are going on right now and people just want to become a part of it. When it comes to us raising up these different levels of vibration, what we must do is by learning to transcend them by completing them.

Being here on Earth you will soon realize that there are certain lessons that we need to learn and complete. We will repeat that lesson until we complete that lesson. For example, it could be you always attract a certain type of mate and they treat you a certain way but until you stand up for yourself and you learn that lesson of how to remain in your place of power, things won't improve. You may continue to attract the same mate even though the faces change the energy, you haven't changed, you remain the same.

You may find that you keep going through the same pattern of doing a certain type of work and often losing your job, and it just may be because there's something there that they are trying to show you, but until you become aware of it, you will keep repeating it the cycle.

You will repeat it over and over again. The key is how to see in your life what lessons you can learn now, it doesn't mean that you're always being tested, but it does mean you should become aware of the signs that you are getting from your higher self.

I'm sure that there have been times where you were giving away your power and then things improved once you started to take control over your power. Once you become aware of it, you are then able to complete this lesson and then let it go.

Many times, you may be stuck in survival mode. By looking at these areas in your life where you feel like you're surviving, where you feel this neediness and you become aware of it, you can now learn how to transcend it.

Give some thought to what Einstein said:

"You cannot solve a problem from the same level of thinking."

The key is to just be aware of what you are learning because your higher self will take over and expand on it and explain what it is about.

(This has happened to me a number of times and different situations and it feels bizarre when you realize it is happening!)

Keep an eye out for certain things and certain patterns that you have that continue to repeat themselves and work on these. Be aware of what you are learning because your higher self will show you what that is.

It's about this collective shift in consciousness that is happening as time goes forward. There will be structures that breakdown. There will be political structures that break down as well as old financial systems that break down. It's a part of tearing down the old and then we can build the new. But you can't build the new on top of another sandcastle.

Understand that we're all connected. This love vibration is about seeing the connectedness between us. It's about understanding how you can be who you naturally are instead of trying to become something else. The way you do that is by doing what you are passionate about. This is the fastest way of raising your vibration.

It is the fastest way of getting guidance from your higher self. The fastest way of getting to your goals is by following your passion, your passion is your higher self telling you that this is what you're meant to be doing, so set the intention for what your passion is. And start to understand how you can add value to other people with your passion. Those combined together is very powerful.

This combination gives you more energy because it sees that you're doing something good with it. In general, there's this collective shift in consciousness happening. The quicker you learn these lessons in your life, the more you can complete them and not repeat them.

Develop a pattern of meditation in your life. Watch how your life changes and you'll start to notice that you start to exist in a higher vibrational state of consciousness which is full of love and which is who you naturally are.

Alternative 3

In 1977, Anglia TV in the UK broadcast an edition of its popular Science Report strand that uncovered a story so colossal it would change the world.

The episode was titled Alternative 3 and began with an investigation into a string of mysterious disappearances amongst top scientists. What followed was sensational.

The scientists, the show discovered, had been recruited into a top-secret clandestine space program, designed to build a base on Mars in anticipation of a forthcoming ecological catastrophe on Earth.

Anglia TV was immediately bombarded with calls from alarmed viewers. The alarm was unwarranted they were told because, like Orson Welles' War of the World in 1938, Alternative 3 was in fact a hoax.

Produced in a documentary style, and originally intended to be broadcast on April 1st, the program was a skillful fiction written by award-winning screenwriter David Ambrose.

Although relatively obscure, Alternative 3 has had an enduring impact since it was first broadcast in 1977. Many now believe the fictional events portrayed in the show subversively reflect reality.

It has inspired hundreds of conspiracy theories about secret space missions, bases on the Moon and Mars and even off-world fleets of advanced spacecraft.

The fictional Alternative 3 culminates with the reporter decoding a video tape which reveals footage of a joint US/USSR mission to Mars in 1962. Could there be any truth in such an amazing notion? Are the space programs of the global superpowers really far more advanced than is admitted to the public?

In 2001, British hacker Gary McKinnon claimed to have found astonishing evidence that such an out of this world program really does exist. Hacking into top secret Pentagon military computers, McKinnon says he found a crew manifest file detailing 'non-terrestrial' officers.

Perhaps this was, at last, the smoking gun that proved Alternative 3 wasn't entirely fictional. Could the secret space program portrayed in the program be real?

More on Alternative 3

Alternative 3 is a very skillfully produced piece of television, weaving together news stories from the headlines of the time into a fiction credible enough it has convinced many it is fact.

As its name suggests, Alternative 3 was the third of three proposed schemes to avert a forthcoming ecological catastrophe on Earth.

The first two of these proposals, at least, were directly based on real projects undertaken in the United States.

Alternative 1 was to use nuclear bombs to blow holes in the stratosphere from which greenhouse gases could escape. Whilst it may sound absurd, a controversial experiment in 1950s did fire nuclear missiles into the atmosphere.

Project Argus was ostensibly set up to measure the effects of radiation on Earth's upper atmosphere and involved the detonation of 3 nuclear warheads hundreds of miles over the south Atlantic Ocean.

Alternative 2 was to build a vast network of underground tunnels and bases in which a select group of people could maintain the human race.

Over a hundred such installations exist in the North America alone. Bases such as Site R in Pennsylvania and Mount Weather in Virginia are so vast that they have their own rail networks, hospitals, and television studios.

One of the most potent ideas in Alternative 3 was the prospect that mankind was on the verge of an ecological cataclysm. This was a worrying concept at the forefront of the public consciousness when the program was broadcast in 1977.

Alarmist stories had begun to emerge about both global warming and global cooling. Dire warnings of extreme weather and environmental chaos were all over the newspapers.

Much of Alternative 3 was, then, based in fact. Could the more outrageous aspects of the plot be true too? Author Leslie Watkins came to believe so.

Watkins was hired to write a novelization of Alternative 3 in 1978 that greatly expanded upon the story presented in the TV show.

After its publication, he received hundreds of letters from what he regarded as credible sources confirming the basic premise behind the book.

Watkins decided to use some of the evidence sent to him to begin a non-fiction sequel to Alternative 3 but backed out after he came to suspect his phone and correspondence was being monitored by the intelligence services.

Watkins started to believe he had stumbled upon something deep and very dark. In 1989, he wrote:

"The book is fiction based on fact. But I now feel that I inadvertently got very close to a secret truth".

Evidence for Parallel Space Programs

As far as the general public are concerned, the American space program is run by NASA (National Aeronautics and Space Administration).

Signed into existence by Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1958, NASA was primarily a civilian organization built upon earlier military space programs.

It's many high-profile projects like Gemini, the Apollo moon missions, and the Space Shuttle were subject to much publicity and public scrutiny.

Despite this, the US Air Force continued to operate an almost entirely unknown, vast and clandestine parallel space program even after the formation of NASA.

This program was to eventually exceed the ambition of Apollo and the Space Shuttle. It operated under almost total secrecy, its scale, scope, and objectives were unknown.

Could the USAF's secret military space program be closer to the one proposed in Alternative 3? And was their technology and progress far more advanced than NASA's public space missions?

The USAF has long since run black projects that were so secret the public, and sometimes even congress, were completely unaware of their existence.

Various aircraft, such as the F-117A Nighthawk, were financed, developed, built and operated under total secrecy. The Nighthawk's existence wasn't revealed publicly until 1988, some 11 years after its first flight.

Could they have similar top-secret space projects that remain entirely unknown to the public? A look at those plans that were acknowledged reveals this curious pattern:

- In the late 1950s, the USAF spent billions of dollars on Dyna-Soar, an advanced, reusable space plane. They then quietly announced its cancellation in 1963.
- In the mid-60s, they canceled plans for a space station called the MOL — Manned Orbital Laboratory.
- Project Horizon was an ambitious plan for a manned moon base that predates NASA's first moon landing in 1969. It too was discretely canceled before it could come to fruition.
- In 1989, the New York Times reported that the Air Force had shut down yet another planned manned space program, with a staff of 32 astronauts and a space shuttle launching facility in Colorado.
- Until the announcement, which appeared in just one newspaper, the existence of this massive, non-NASA space project was completely unknown.

It doesn't seem credible that the USAF would spend so many hundreds of billions of dollars on multiple manned space programs and then quietly mothball them all with no results.

Could it be they were never canceled at all but continued in secret? And were there other, even more secret black projects we still know nothing about?

If so, these programs would have been far more advanced than anything NASA publicly achieved and move the prospect of the kind of secret space program envisaged in Alternative 3 closer to fact than fiction. (Or far surpasses it!)

A curious diary entry by President Ronald Reagan in 1985 suggests such a possibility may not be so far-fetched.

In the diaries, published long after his presidency, Reagan recounts a meeting at the White House with several top space scientists.

On page 334 he states — "It was fascinating. Space truly is the last frontier and some of the developments there in astronomy etc. are like science fiction, except they are real. I learned that our shuttle capacity is such that we could orbit 300 people".

Presuming Reagan wasn't simply confused or mistaken, this claim is impossible without the prospect of a secret space program.

America's space shuttle has a capacity of 8 people, and only 5 were ever built. The U.S. does not, and never has had, at least officially, the technology to put 300 people into space.

The science fiction reference seemed apt. However, in 2001, a computer hacker from the UK found evidence that cast this obscure entry in Reagan's diary in a sensational new light.

The Hacker

In 2002, Scottish computer enthusiast Gary McKinnon was accused by the US government of “the biggest military computer hack of all time”.

Under the guise of ‘Solo’, McKinnon hacked into dozens of Pentagon, USAF, and NASA computers between 2001 and 2002.

US prosecutors sought his extradition and charged him with 7 counts of computer-related crime which could have seen McKinnon receive a 70-year prison sentence.

His roll call of alleged crimes was impressive: disabling critical systems at a navy airbase not long after 9/11, bringing down an entire network of 2000 US Army computers and copying, changing and deleting classified data.

McKinnon himself maintains his actions were not malicious and he was merely searching for evidence of UFOs and suppressed free energy technology. If he can be believed, what he found was incredible.

The first find was spreadsheet detailing a list of USAF officers, with their names and ranks. What was interesting about this was the file was titled ‘non-terrestrial officers.’”

Based on what else he found, McKinnon does not think this is a reference to aliens, but human officers serving in space.

Also, in the file was information about ship-to-ship transfers. What made this file doubly strange was none of the ship names, or indeed officers, seemed to exist.

McKinnon was aware of the case of Donna Hare, an ex-NASA employee who said the agency had a department in building 8 at the Johnson Space Center whose job was to airbrush UFOs out of space images.

McKinnon found an unguarded computer at building 8 and looked for evidence to corroborate Hare’s story. Incredibly, he says he found it.

There were a series of folders on the computer labeled 'raw' and 'processed'. Inside the raw folder, he found an image of large, silvery, cigar-shaped craft pictured in orbit over the northern hemisphere.

Could this be a spacecraft developed by a secret space program of the kind proposed in Alternative 3?

According to his supporters, the reason for the "extraordinary" persecution that McKinnon has been facing is because he did discover something in the US military's files, namely a secret space program called the Solar Warden.

Critics of Gary McKinnon's case question why he didn't download or screen capture any of these images. The hacker himself also admits he was often high on marijuana and drunk when he hacked the computers.

Caveats aside, McKinnon had provided some tantalizing evidence in support for a secret space program. But it was still weak.

Was there anyone else to corroborate his claims?

Secret Space Program Disclosure

Some ex-employees of NASA, the military, and its defense contractors have come forward in recent years with evidence that supports the secret space program theory.

Some of these whistleblowers tell stories that are so bizarre and incredible that we may be tempted to dismiss them in favor of others that are more credible. But should we?

- In 1965, Sgt Karl Wolfe was a young electronics expert at USAF Tactical Air Command at Langley AFB in Hampton, Virginia. One day he was called over to an NSA facility to examine a fault in some photographic equipment. The lab was processing images of the moon's surface taken by the lunar orbiter. One thing immediately struck Wolfe. There were hundreds of scientists from all over the world at the facility, speaking dozens of different languages. Wolfe felt this peculiar, especially at the height of the cold war. He got talking with a photographic technician processing the lunar orbiter images. The man appeared disturbed. "We've found a base on the backside of the moon", he said. Wolfe was stunned. The technician then showed him contact prints that showed the base. Wolfe observed large domes, towers and what looked like radar dishes.

The fictional Alternative 3 suggested the secret space program had built a moon base as a staging point for a mission to Mars. Was this it? Was Alternative 3 really that fictional?

- Donna Hare tells a similar story. As a NASA contractor in the 1970s, she encountered an employee whose job it was to airbrush UFOs out of NASA photos. Intrigued, Hare sniffed around for more information. She heard chatter that the Apollo astronauts had observed artificial structures and even spacecraft on the moon.
- John Schuessler spent 36 years as an aerospace engineer at Boeing and worked on numerous NASA projects. He too recalled seeing Apollo images containing UFOs. However, when accessing NASA's official photo archive of the mission, he was unable to find the photos. The numerically indexed images had been removed from the collection.
- Perhaps the most unlikely whistleblower for a secret space program is the military of France. In 2007, Col. Yves Blin of the French Department of Defense announced some very intriguing data gathered by their Graves space radar system. Some 20–30 satellites were detected that appeared not to exist. The U.S. Defense Department maintains a list of all satellites in orbit, including the classified military satellites of other countries, and none of these were listed.

These mysterious satellites were, then, almost certainly launched by the U.S. themselves. Whilst not evidence for Alternative 3, it did prove the existence of a clandestine space program of a kind.

Whatever the purpose of these satellites, they would require a large infrastructure back on earth — facilities, funding, technology, staff, rockets and launch pads, all operating in secret.

Is it too much of a stretch to suppose this infrastructure had achieved far more than just launching satellites? Could it have been responsible for the UFO's and structures observed on the moon by some witnesses?

Projects such as Horizon and Lunex envisaged military bases on the moon that predated Apollo. Officially they were shut down but did they in fact continue to operate as deep black projects?

The idea that the US military may have secretly established a base on the moon is far-fetched but not so outrageous as to be entirely dismissed.

But in Alternative 3, a moon base was simply a staging point for a mission to Mars. In terms of scale, ambition and complexity this would be far in excess of a moon base.

However, back in 2010, evidence that such a mission has already occurred came from the most unlikely source.

Laura Eisenhower, the great-granddaughter of former president Dwight D Eisenhower, says she was approached in 2006 to take part in a mission to the red planet.

She was told she would be joining a base on Mars, set up as a survival colony in the event of a catastrophe on Earth. This was then, the exact same scenario proposed in Alternative 3.

Eisenhower's incredible story was ridiculed by most people. However, she seems sincere and no doubt believes what happened was genuine. The possibility that she was the target of some kind of hoax or intelligence operation cannot therefore be dismissed. Or do we start taking some of these witnesses seriously?

Evidence of a Secret Space Program

The Money

Critics of the idea of a secret space program point out the vast amount of money that would be required to mount such an operation.

While the U.S. military has long run black budgets, the amount of unaccounted money that would be required to construct bases on the Moon and Mars would be eye-wateringly vast.

Such a program would completely dwarf the Apollo moon missions, which cost, in current prices, $110 billion dollars.

Could such huge sums be generated 'off the books'? Bill Sweetman, editor of Defense Technology International, estimated the U.S. military black budget to be $50 billion in 2010.

To put that into context, NASA's budget in the same year was just $17 billion. So huge amounts of money are available, but much of that is already spent on conventional black military projects — planes, missiles, bombs and so forth.

Other sources of revenue would still be needed beyond the traditional black budget dollars. And even if such funding could be secured, could it really be spent without anyone noticing?

A project on the scale of Alternative 3 would generate millions of financial transactions, employ 100,000s of people and involve hundreds of technology and engineering companies.

Could this really be done under absolute secrecy, without more people coming forward and admitting involvement? It's doubtful that what would effectively be the biggest undertaking in human history could really be kept so secret. But stranger things have happened.

I Found the Money!

OK, you want to know where the huge sums of money could be found to fund the Secret Space Program? Well here goes,,,

The Pentagon's $35 Trillion Accounting Black Hole

While it shouldn't come as a surprise for an organization that has famously failed to ever pass an audit, the Pentagon was nevertheless recently able to shock some observers with a new batch of financial numbers.

According to Bloomberg's Anthony Carpaccio, the Department of Defense made $35 trillion in "accounting adjustments" in 2019, easily surpassing the $30.7 trillion in such adjustments recorded in 2018.

Carpaccio notes that the number "dwarfs the $738 billion of defense-related funding in the latest U.S. budget, a spending plan that includes the most expensive weapons systems in the world including the F-35 jet as well as new aircraft carriers, destroyers and submarines." It's also "larger than the entire U.S. economy and underscores the Defense Department's continuing difficulty in balancing its books."

So, what are these accounting adjustments? Todd Harrison of the Center for Strategic and International Studies says they represent "a lot of double, triple, and quadruple counting of the same money as it got moved between accounts" within the Pentagon. "A lot" may be an understatement: According to government data, there were 562,568 adjustments made in the Pentagon's books in 2018.

Why it matters: More broadly, the number highlights the persistent lack of internal financial controls at the Pentagon, which makes it extremely difficult to account properly for spending in the largest government budget. "Although it gets scant public attention compared with airstrikes, troop deployments, sexual assault statistics or major weapons programs, the reliability of the Pentagon's financial statement is an indication of how effectively the military manages its resources considering that it receives over half of discretionary domestic spending," Carpaccio says.

Rep. Jackie Speier (D-CA), who asked the Government Accountability Office to look into the issue, said the "combined errors, shorthand, and sloppy record-keeping by DoD accountants do add up to a number nearly 1.5 times the size of the U.S. economy," and charged that the Pentagon "employs accounting adjustments like a contractor paints over mold. Their priority is making the situation look manageable, not solving the underlying problem."

Where's the hardware?

If a large spaceship was really orbiting over the northern hemisphere as McKinnon claimed, wouldn't it be noticed?

There are hundreds of satellites in orbit from dozens of countries around the world, yet none appeared to have detected the presence of such a craft.

Nor have any of the millions of amateur astronomers on Earth observed the craft with their telescopes.

An orbiting spaceship and bases on the Moon and Mars would require hundreds of launches from Earth to construct, all of which would have to occur in complete secrecy and remain unobserved by anyone.

Furthermore, countries with a traditional enmity to the West such as Russia, North Korea, China, and Iran have all launched their own satellites and probes to both the Moon and Mars. How could the craft and the bases be concealed from them?

Is the answer to those questions Stealth Technology? Alien crafts have long had the ability to just blink out and disappear.

There is so much going on up there in the sky that not everything is going to get noticed. And how many star gazers are qualified enough to the difference between what belongs up there and what is suspicious and needs to be investigated?

OK, say you spot something such as an alien star fleet of eighteen motherships larger than that our aircraft carriers? Do you know who to report it to? And after it is reported to the proper organization then what? Will anyone ever reveal it to the public? Of course not!

Alternative 3 proposes that governments from around the world would conspire together, but this would suggest that the evident hostility of such rival countries is actually a public charade.

President Reagan on September 21, 1987, before the United Nations General Assembly:

"In our obsession with antagonisms of the moment, we often forget how much unites all the members of humanity. Perhaps we need some outside, universal threat to make us recognize this common bond. I occasionally think how quickly our differences worldwide would vanish if we were facing an alien threat from outside of this world. And yet I ask – is not an alien force already among us? "

The Solar Warden Spacecraft indicates the US and the Soviet Union did join forces against and outside alien threat.

Could it really be that the Cold War, which brought the world to the brink of nuclear Armageddon on more than one occasion, was a sham and the U.S.S.R. and U.S. were secretly working together all along? We'll, there is evidence that we were working together with the Russians on space projects during the cold war. Some of these government projects are far above the petty and often fake squabbles between politicians.

Maybe there is proof that we were secretly working on space programs with the Russians, read on...

A Rather surprising and disturbing experience at the Smithsonian air and space museum in Washington D.C.

Larry Toth
Hampton, Virginia
19 February 2020

My home is in Hampton Virginia and for just under 10 years from 2000 to late 2009, I commuted weekly to Washington D.C. for my job. I enjoyed the work very much and the colleagues I was fortunate to work with, but the drive and the traffic were horrendous and a source of great stress. This necessitated me renting an apartment for the term and I was able to secure a basement apartment in nearby Springfield.

For the vast majority of weekends, I returned to Hampton, rarely did I remain in Springfield for the weekend. But on one summer weekend I decided to stay and visit the museums in the city. My favorite was and remains the air and space museum, so that was my first stop. I first went to the Apollo/Lunar Excursion display, noting again the display of a blast effect under the descent nozzle which is never seen in any of the Apollo lander photographs. Hmmmnn.

Next, I headed over to the Apollo/Soyuz display area and noticed a capsule that looked like it had just recently been delivered. Moving closer against the wall and strapped securely on top of several heavy-duty pallets was the spherical Vostok/Voskhod Soviet space capsule! I was very excited and felt fortunate to have stumbled upon this recent acquisition. It was odd looking, as it would be more at home under the water than in space. I went to the back side and climbed up on the pallets and noticed a hatch was completely off. It was circular and was not hinged, it was not evident how it was secured. The hatch was simply set against the wall.

Now this is where it gets surprising and disturbing. I climbed up far enough to see completely inside, I leaned in to get the best view. It was quite different from our capsules; rather cramped looking like things were placed in there without concern for comfort. Looking closer at the controls, I saw what I could not believe! Every single button, knob, lever, or control element had TWO lines that identified it. The top line was in Russian Cyrillic and immediately below was ENGLISH! I could not believe my eyes! These labels were made that way from the start and were not an afterthought or add-on! The more I looked, the more irritated I became Why English? And built in that way from the start with clear intention...

As a boy growing up in the 60s, I followed the space program faithfully, I never missed a report. The astronauts were my heroes. We did not have a lot of money, so I made my own space capsules out of cardboard. Seeing all these English labels throughout the whole capsule told me I had been lied to all along. We were told we were in a stiff competition with the soviets in the 'space race'. This capsule was from the early to mid-sixties when we were supposedly in the heat of this so-called race to space! Someone lied and misled me bigtime.

I became rather irate and climbed down and with a very loud voice demanded to see the director! I was quite loud, it was not like me to behave in this way in public, the betrayal I felt was overwhelming. In short order a guard came up to me and basically ushered me out of the museum. I still to this day had not been back.

In the intervening years, I had asked friends who had gone to the museum to check on the capsule and they all said they could not find it there. Nor was I able to find mention of it on the web as being part of the exhibition. Is this yet another example of an artifact that had been muscled to the hidden basements of the Smithsonian as it does not fit the 'approved' storyline. I will be heading back there this summer to pursue this further.

A few years later, a dear friend of mine was engaged to a gentleman from Greece. We spent many an engaging dinner and evenings together discussing all sorts of topics. We often got into the space program and paranormal events. He had been in the Greek navy and had spent time on what had been the USS Eldridge, the ship famed in the Philadelphia experiment. He told of many very strange events on that ship. We had sold it to Greece, and it was in their navy. I shared my research into the Apollo program, and he began laughing rather heartily. I asked what was so funny and he said he was not laughing at me but rather at Americans for being so naïve and foolish. For brevity's sake he said he had watched a soviet general who was very senior in the soviet lunar manned program on Greek Television laying out their whole effort! What? Laughing he said, you weren't the first with Apollo, you went with soviets in 1962 and landed then! He said our media is totally controlled and we have all been fooled and lied to.

My friend and I were speechless, there is considerably more to this topic...

The Moon

A very strange place

Most people think the Moon is, well, a moon, but there is some talk that it should actually be classified as a planet. For one, it's far too big to be a "true" moon.

Being about one-fourth of the diameter of Earth, it is easily the biggest moon in relation to its planet in our solar system. (Pluto has a moon called Charon that is half its diameter in size, but since Pluto isn't a real planet anymore, it doesn't count.)

Because of its large size, the Moon doesn't actually orbit Earth at all. Instead, Earth and Moon orbit each other, around a point between them. This point is called a barycenter, and the illusion the Moon is actually orbiting Earth comes from the fact that the barycenter is currently located inside the Earth's crust. The fact that the barycenter remains inside the Earth is pretty much the only reason Earth and Moon aren't classified as a twin planet, instead of a planet and its satellite. However, this may change in the future.

Where did the Moon come from?

There are several main theories about the origin of the Moon. The Fission Theory argues that the Moon used to be a part of our planet that was separated at some very early point of Earth's history. This would make the Moon part to what is currently the Pacific Ocean basin.

The Capture Theory says that the Moon was just wandering the universe until our gravitational field caught it. Other theories say our satellite was either condensed from a bunch of asteroids or the remains of Earth's collision with an unknown Mars-sized planet.

Currently, the most likely candidate for the Moon's origin story is the Ejected Ring Theory, which is better known as Giant Impact Theory. According to this version, a protoplanet (a planet that is forming) called Theia collided with Earth. The ensuing cloud of debris eventually condensed into the Moon.

Its Dimensions and Positioning are too Perfect for Some

Over the last few years, there have been several total eclipses of the Sun by the Moon. The fact that we experience these is a wonder in itself. According to our sources, our Moon is the only known moon to do this with its host. (However, some will argue—vociferously, we might add—that Earth is the only solid planet from which you can see a total solar eclipse.)

For Earth, it all has to do with the relative sizes of the Sun, the Moon, and the Earth's distance from both.

The size of the Moon is about one-quarter that of the Earth. Now here is where things get strange. The diameter of the Moon is about 400 times smaller than that of the Sun. But the Moon is also 400 times closer to the Earth than the Sun.

Oh yes, and the Moon just happens to keep a perfect circular orbit around the Earth—again, the only known moon to do so. This also gives us the impression that the Moon and the Sun are the same size in our skies.

While most likely coincidence, all these factors still have only an astronomical chance of occurring (literally millions to one). Yet they did. Of course, those in conspiracy and UFO circles will tell you that the reason for this is simple: The Moon is “artificial” and its dimensions—exact and precise as they are—are the result of intelligence and planning. Make of the claims what you will.

It's Hollow

Carl Sagan stated that a natural satellite (which the Moon is considered to be) can't be hollow.

So, it shocked scientists greatly when the seismic equipment on the Moon registered substantial reverberations on November 20, 1969, after the intentional jettisoning of the Apollo 12 lunar module's ascent stage back to the surface. Not only did the Moon reverberate "like a bell," it did so for over an hour.

If this data was to be believed, it would naturally suggest that the Moon is hollow.

During the following mission, a greater payload was jettisoned, and the reverberation was measured again. This time, the effect was even greater, with the "ringing" continuing for well over three hours.

Despite the suggestions that the Moon might indeed be hollow—based upon NASA's own experiments—the findings were largely downplayed by NASA in the years afterward. At least to the public's knowledge, this has not been studied further.

Former NASA Rocket Scientist David Adair Says the Moon Is Hollow

During some of the Apollo missions, modules were fired into the lunar surface, and the moon rang like a bell, in one case for around four hours.

Because of this, Adair has concluded that the moon is hollow, and he also noted that it's perfectly symmetrical shape is highly unusual compared to more lumpy satellites such as Deimos and Phobos that orbit around Mars. The moon is simply too big to have been captured in Earth's orbit, he remarked, so it would seem to have been flown in and placed here.

The Moon's Craters are Strange

The Moon is littered with craters from multiple impacts over the many years of its existence. To some, it is strange how uniform these craters look in terms of their depth. Accepted knowledge tells us that they should vary greatly in depth, yet they don't.

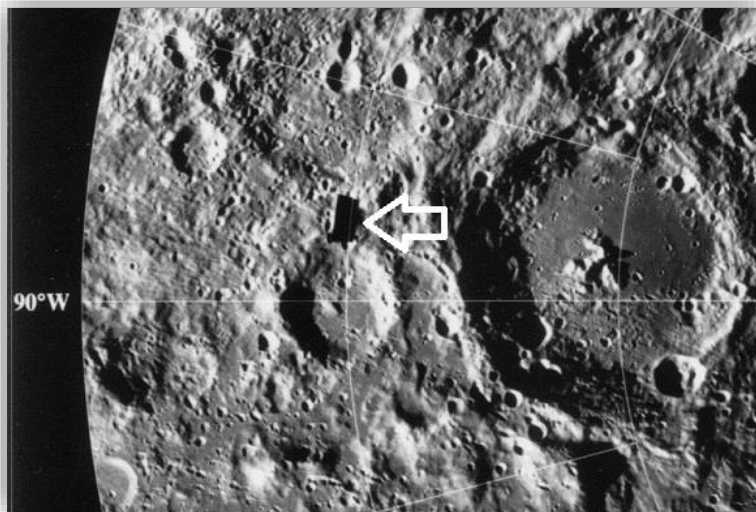

Just another anomaly of space? Most likely. But to some, it is a little more.

Those who contend that the Moon is artificial or hollow point to these craters as being further proof of their theories. One such belief suggests that an "inner casing" of sorts exists under the rocky lunar surface.

The theorists assert that this casing would have to consist of some kind of metallic material, capable of both absorbing the impacts and evenly distributing them so as to avoid any deep craters. According to some, this casing also prevents damage to what might lie beneath it.

The Moon's Many 'Artificial' Structures

NASA says that "artificial" structures on the Moon are optical illusions in most cases and the result of blurry images in the other instances. However, eagle-eyed UFO enthusiasts state that these images are undeniable proof of alien and artificial structures on the Moon.

A quick Internet search on this subject will bring back a plethora of images, and some of them are quite convincing. But some say there is little, if any, solid proof to back up some of these alleged finds.

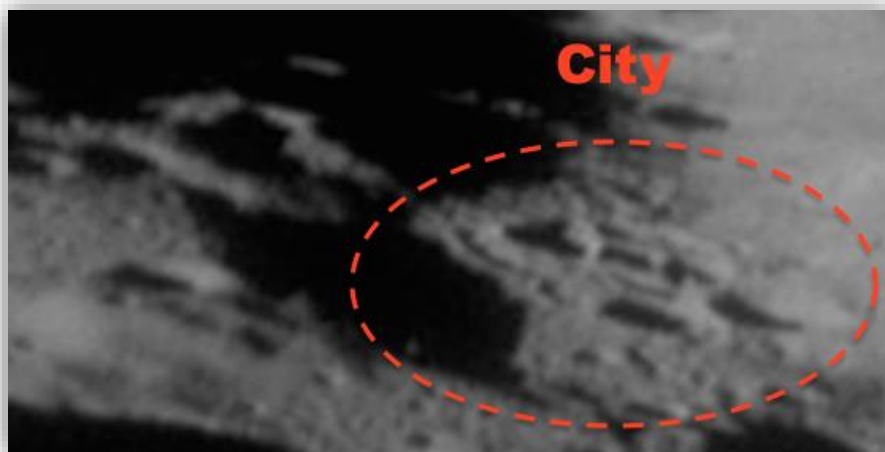

Is this just a coincidence? One such anomaly goes by the name of "The Shard" and can be found in NASA Image LO-III-84-M. It appears to show an artificial structure towering above the surface. The fact that it also appears to project a shadow leads many UFO researchers to reject the optical illusion suggestion.

Interestingly, a short distance away (relatively speaking) sits another alleged structure. “The Tower” has been estimated to stand around 7 miles tall. If proven to be a true building, this is taller than anything on Earth and might offer insight into how such weak gravity might be used by our own space explorers.

It Was Brought Here and Placed in Orbit

There is no doubt that life on Earth would be drastically different without the Moon. In terms of human beings, life might not even be possible. The Moon stabilizes the oceans and the polar regions of the planet, which then creates the seasons that allow most areas of the planet to thrive and life to prosper.

However, many ancient writings appear to document a time before a moon existed in our skies. So as unlikely, crazy, and no doubt outright stupid as it might be to some, is it possible that the Moon is an artificial structure purposely designed to exact specifications and put in an exact and calculated orbit to stabilize conditions on Earth?

Whoever might be behind such an act would need advanced technology—surely beyond anything we are aware of—and advanced knowledge.

For the sake of argument, if the Moon was brought here with a purposeful intent, who was behind such a monumental feat? An unknown, lost civilization so much more advanced than we currently are today? If so, where did they go? And if not them, who?

The moon is alleged to be an ancient artificial construction. Scientists have found that the moon “rings” like a bell for several days when a meteor strikes it. It was supposed to be the sphere that the luciferians’ or the “pan” people like the satyrs of legend (part angel, part humanoid, and part animal), used to escape the war in heaven. Sort of a refugee ship that the rebels used to make it to earth, where they hoped to make their last stand, within the moon and the earth, against the angelic forces of light.

Ancient Texts Speak of a Time ‘Before the Moon’

Many ancient writings speak of a time “before the Moon.” In turn, many scholars have quoted these works over the centuries.

For example, Aristotle wrote of Arcadia, stating that the land was occupied “before there was a moon in the sky above the Earth.” Similarly, Apollonius of Rhodes spoke of a time “when not all the orbs were yet in the heavens.”

The tribe of Chibchas in Colombia also has such notions in their traditional oral legends. They state, “In the earliest times, when the Moon was not yet in the heavens!” The wording sounds remarkably like that of Apollonius.

Perhaps also of interest, particularly given the bizarre claims of the Moon being put into position around the Earth, are some Zulu legends which say that the Moon was dragged across space from a great distance.

Most of these accounts also speak of intense disruption to the planet until the new heavenly body settled into its true orbit.

It Is the Result of Alien Intelligence

Okay, some of you will be a step ahead here. So, with that in mind, let's get to the point on this one. Aliens!

If an unknown ancient and indigenous civilization was not behind the purposeful placement of the Moon, then the only logical choice would be to suggest that an extraterrestrial race might be responsible.

There are many angles on this theory, too. We will look at one such claim shortly, but researcher and controversial author, David Icke, maintains that the Moon is an artificial satellite that projects signals from Saturn to our planet, creating the "matrix" that makes up our reality.

Admit it, that makes the secret bases on the Moon sound reasonable, right?

More than anything else, you would have to ask: Why would an alien race be so concerned about the placement of a moon around an alien world like Earth? We'll get to that shortly.

The Moon's Rotation Is Also Unique

We have all heard of the dark side of the Moon, the part of our celestial neighbor that we never see. Many people think that this is because the Moon doesn't spin. However, it is more accurate to call this part of the Moon the "far side" as the Moon does indeed spin.

It takes the Moon 27.3 days to orbit Earth once. At the same time, it also takes the Moon 27 days to do a complete rotation on its own axis. This “synchronous rotation” causes a side of the Moon to always face away from our planet. Again, our Moon appears to be unique in this.

From the perspective of the “dark side of the Moon” conspiracy theorists, the end result is still the same. A side of the Moon is permanently away from the viewing eyes on our planet which makes it an ideal place to establish a base and carry out secret activity with advanced technology.

Alex Collier’s Letters From Andromeda

In his controversial and widely ridiculed book, “Letters from Andromeda”, author and researcher Alex Collier claimed to have uncovered the real history of the Moon. Perhaps the way he sourced his information made people a little suspicious. He had received “telepathic communications” from an alien who resided in the “Zenetae” constellation. And these are the tamer parts of his claims.

According to Collier, the Moon was actually a huge spaceship that arrived here millions of years ago carrying “reptilians, human-reptilian hybrids and the first humans to set foot on Earth!” Collier said that the Moon was hollow and there were several secret entrances around the surface. He also “confirmed” that a metal shell existed below the surface.

He claimed that there were remains of ancient alien bases on and inside the Moon, left over from a huge war that was fought 113,000 years ago. These bases were now occupied by a secret world government that was working alongside an extraterrestrial race.

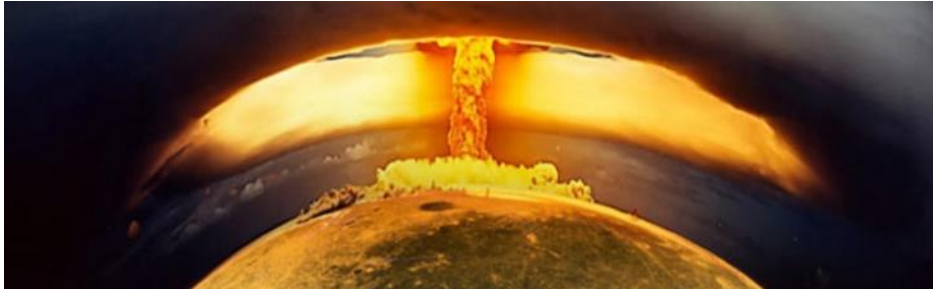

Makes sense to me.

Operational Bases

Alex Collier is certainly not the only person to claim that bases exist on the Moon. There has been a wave of such declarations, often connected to anonymous whistle-blowers and leaked secret documents over the last two decades alone.

A recent claim about the presence of an operational Moon base was made by Dr. Michael Salla, who works with the Chinese space agency in their attempts to achieve a manned mission to the Moon.

Salla also says that the base was the result of the “military industrial extraterrestrial complex.” And claimed that NASA was actively bombing such bases as well as “ancient artifacts and facilities” to cover up their existence.

As bizarre as this sounds, there are facts that back up claims of NASA bombings and further plans to bomb the Moon!

Furthermore, he has stated that secret mining missions were being carried out by a “Secret World Government” that had made a covert pact with an unknown extraterrestrial race.

There’s a ton of more powerful information on the purpose of the Moon and the alien presence on the Moon as well as messages that the aliens want us Earth dwellers to understand. It’s all in my “Aliens on the Moon” book.

Go to page 154 for more info on my “Aliens on the Moon” book.

Lunar Operations Command

The Lunar Operations Command (LOC) is what would be considered a demilitarized zone on the Moon. It is an area where Secret Space Program personnel rendezvous before going further out into the solar system and even beyond.

It serves as a neutral zone for the various SSPs. While also acting as air traffic control for our solar system. The LOC consists of three sites that I know of: LOC Alpha, LOC Bravo, and LOC Charlie.

In the late-1930’s and 1940’s, the Germans constructed what became LOC Alpha while occupying an adjacent facility, which was ancient and re-pressurized. They started building in earnest in the late 1950’s.

There is a lava tube skylight in the crater where LOC Alpha is. This leads into a huge lava cavern, which is part of a network of caverns connected by lava tubes. There are flight bays from top to bottom. The lower flight bay is used to fly through a lava tube to LOC Bravo.

LOC Alpha has at least 11 subsurface levels. There is a VIP area on the first floor. The second and third floors are the medical and surgical floors. On one of the lower floors is an amphitheater.

LOC Alpha would handle the traffic of all space programs (civilian/military/intelligence satellites, NASA, secret military, other nations, and of all of the advanced SSPs) and their assets to try to plan and schedule their locations to prevent them from being visible to each other as much as possible.

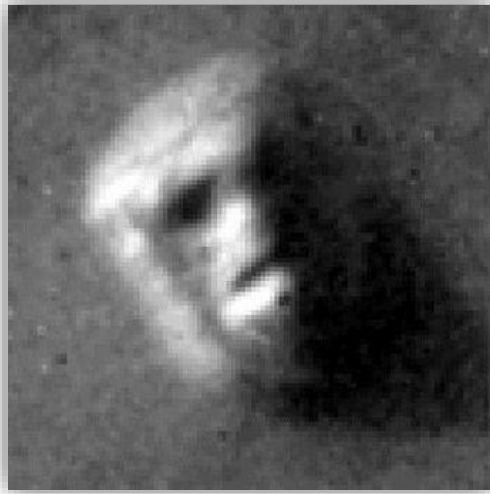

The “air and space traffic control” on LOC coordinates the “Earth Defense Grid” enforced by the MIC-SSP. Human and alien craft running on zero-point energy produce a signature with a specific frequency. Detection of this frequency is how air traffic control and the MIC-SSP monitor craft.

Mars Defense Force

After his training, Cramer was apparently inducted into a military organization known as the Mars Defense Force (MDF). The MDF was a joint operation created by a number of different Earth governments to guard five flourishing colonies on Mars. Cramer recollects visiting Aries Prime, which was the first colony built on the Red Planet. He describes this colony as containing a full Earthlike ecosystem complete with farmers, engineers, and bureaucrats.

Cramer reportedly defended these bases from indigenous Martians and other extraterrestrial species. He completed a 17-year tour of duty on Mars before he was reassigned to the Moon for his remaining three years of service.

Like other secret space program assets, Cramer alleges that he was involved in a so-called “20-and-back,” which is a 20-year term of service that each participant agrees to with a litany of consent forms. At the end of this obligation, 20-and-back assets are memory-wiped and age-regressed back to the age they were when they entered the program.

They are then sent back in time to a point within minutes of their original date of departure. According to various insiders, only two to five percent of 20-and-back participants ever regain their memories.

At first this may seem strange and you may be wondering if any of these mind control procedures are even possible but consider what was going on a number of years ago at the Montauk Base. Check out the Montauk Project Book, see info on page 154.

Was the Phobos Failure Caused By HAARP?

A few years ago, Russia tried to send a probe to Mars. It was dubbed the Phobos-Grunt. From nearly the beginning, the probe was beset by challenges.

While still in orbit around Earth, before it could even head off to the red planet, it started having problems communicating with home base. The probe was supposed to head to Mars once it reached low orbit around Earth, but it orbited higher than it was supposed to, and then just kind of kept orbiting.

When stations on Earth managed to establish contact, even the ones in Russia received confusing encrypted data. Eventually, the craft completely failed. Was this caused by aliens? There have been rockets destroyed by what appear to be UFOs as they attempting to leave Earth on some suspicious mission. Some blamed the U.S. and the project HAARP (High Frequency Active Auroral Research Program). for the failure of the Phobos-Grunt.

MOSCOW — A Russian scientific spacecraft may have failed because it was struck by some type of antisatellite weapon, the director of Russia’s space agency said in an interview.

Were we trying to protect the secrets of our Mars settlements? This isn’t the first time Russians craft launches to Mars failed. Just a coincidence?

Ex-NASA Employee: “I Saw Humans Walk on Mars In 1979”

For years, we have been sending probes and trying to get a better understanding of the landscape and the life that may or may not have existed there. Speculation continues to increase every year as to when we will be able to send a manned mission to Mars, and what kind of challenges we will continue to face. However, some people are convinced that we went to Mars long ago and have had a colony set up for a while. For those who believe in such a notion, there may be new “evidence” that has come to light.

In 2014, a woman who called herself Jackie claimed that she used to work for NASA and that she saw evidence that we have colonies on Mars—or that there are actually intelligent Martians living on the red planet. According to her story, she was helping bring the Viking Lander down on the Martian landscape while she handled the downlink telemetry for the craft, when she saw two humanoid figures walking toward the lander.

She claims that she and her colleagues nearby had their feeds cut out as this happened. They ran upstairs to try to get a better look, but their superiors had locked the doors and taped up any cracks so they could not look through.

The woman speculates as to whether it was aliens or fellow humans, although her theory seems to fall more on the side that they were human colonists.

Mission to Mars

The reason for the mission to Mars was to actually explore in person the vast region full of anomalies seen in the previous telescope and signal observations. It was then that they came across an advanced civilization residing in the underground of Mars.

These beings are the very same beings depicted on all cave carvings around the world. Coordinates of the Martian civilization were also stated on the carvings which at that time were absolutely indecipherable. But now?

The mission had a sub-mission just in case the main mission failed along the way. Technological trades were also part of the mission. During this mission almost half of the jumpers had died due to various events (mainly involving confrontation with alien inhabitants). They have also discovered that Mars is currently harboring multiple beings that are controlled by supreme beings that all other beings consider as their overlords, and these very same beings are the ones controlling our government today!

The Mars Conspiracy

There are claims (backed up by a number of credible witnesses and evidence) that NASA doctored Mars images that may have contained evidence of life on Mars, such as water sources, planet occupation, and ancient extraterrestrial habitations or even civilizations.

NASA has deliberately altered the colors of the images to make the Martian sky appear an absurd "Technicolor red," when in fact all the evidence clearly shows that the true color of the Martian sky is (and must be) blue.

A New Look at Conditions on Mars

Valles Marineris topographic view constructed from MOLA altimetry data

Breathable air: Researchers of Project Pegasus and Montauk Project, claim that Mars has a breathable surface, but not nearly as much oxygen as is at sea level on Earth. According to Andrew Basiago, Mars oxygen is formed from its crust.

In a 2016 report, manganese was found in Mars basalt rock, which led researchers to discover rocks filled with manganese oxides in the region of Caribou. For manganese to exist, the right environmental conditions must be in effect, which points to oxygen. After certain processes, the byproduct of Oxygen would be released into the atmosphere in order to produce the manganese.

In 2016, NASA researchers reported having detected atomic oxygen in Mars' atmosphere, with the Stratospheric Observatory for Infrared Astronomy (SOFIA). The oxygen atoms were found in the Martian upper atmosphere, known as the mesosphere.

"Atomic oxygen in the Martian atmosphere is notoriously difficult to measure," said SOFIA project scientist, Pamela Marcum. "To observe the far-infrared wavelengths needed to detect atomic oxygen, researchers must be above the majority of Earth's atmosphere and use highly sensitive instruments, in this case a spectrometer. SOFIA provides both capabilities." The Earth's skies are dense and moist, making it extremely difficult to accurately see the Universe lying beyond it.

Water: Scientists believe Mars may have once been a habitable world. There is evidence to suggest that life, or at the very least, water existed. In the 1800s the theory that life still existed emerged. William Whewell believed he spotted Canals on Mars. However, the belief was, for the most part, quelled by William Wallace Campbell in 1894 when he showed there was neither water nor oxygen present.

Pre-civilization: Richard C. Hoagland proposed that the various obscure Martian images received, are monuments that were perhaps built by ancient civilizations. It is also proposed that the Cydonia regions had suffered atomic devastation as indicated by glazes of trinitite.

A Tennessee lady reported having received a message from an obscure figure who claimed that Mars and Earth were at war, and that Earth destroyed the surface of Mars. Photo shows what looks like a "large gash" across its face. In the close of the message, the Martians captured Terran souls and condemned them to be recycled on Earth to be "dead forever".

Stargate Program

The US Space-Time program can be traced back to 1947. It was absorbed into NASA and DARPA. It was under the defense program that Project Pegasus achieved successful organic teleportations to Mars as early as the '60s. An estimated 140 children were used in experimental teleportation jumps to Mars. The success of the jumps has allowed colonization on Mars, but to keep the secrecy, the colonies are located in underground bases.

You will find the Stargate and Pegasus Programs covered in more detail elsewhere in this book.

Leaving from a Time Portal in Australia for Mars

Some sources even contend that Pine Gap is simultaneously operational in the 3rd, 4th and 5th dimensions. A serviceman mentioned that he leaves for Mars military service from a time portal in Australia. It could possibly be either Pine Gap or Nurranger base.

He says that the Mars colony has been in physical existence since 1964. He joined the program when the Terraforming began in 1983 and that was 3 years into a 20-year plan. He is now manager of the Terraforming Branch. The other branches are Energy, Habitat (they have over 2000 residents now) Quantum Physics and Vehicle Construction.

The largest and most expensive is Vehicle Construction, because of the “Interstellar Traveler”. He says all personnel and patrons are voluntary including himself. It is an English-speaking world conspiracy.

There are supposed to be Greys, Reptiloids and Dracos in the lower levels of Pine Gap just as there are at Dulce Base. Both are tri-gate bases, that is they each have star-gates, quantum-gates, ND earth-gates (shuttle terminals).

How a Weird Mars Rock may be Solid Proof of an Ancient Oxygen Atmosphere

Interview with Nina Lanza, staff scientist at Los Alamos National Laboratory

When researchers found a compound that shouldn't have been there, it revealed a missing piece of Mars' history. According to Nina:

I look at rocks on Mars for a living—a lot of rocks. Because of this, I've gotten pretty good at knowing what to expect and what not to expect when analyzing the chemical make-up of a Martian rock. You expect to find lots of basalt, the building block of all planets.

What I didn't expect were large amounts of manganese. So, when my colleagues and I found exactly that on a Martian rock called "Caribou" back in 2013, we thought, "This has to be a mistake."

Caribou Conundrum

Trace amounts of the element manganese typically exist in basalt. To get a rock with as much manganese as Caribou has, the manganese needs to be concentrated somehow. The rock has to be dissolved in liquid water that also has oxygen dissolved in it.

If conditions are right, the manganese liberated from the rock can then precipitate as manganese oxide minerals. On Earth, dissolved oxygen in groundwater comes from our atmosphere. We've known for some time now that Mars once had vast oceans, lakes and streams. If we could peer onto Mars millions of years ago, we'd see a very wet world. Yet we didn't think Mars ever had enough oxygen to concentrate manganese—and that's why we thought the data from Caribou must have been an error.

The Hunt Is On

So, what do you do when you find a Martian rock with a chemistry you didn't expect? You go look for more.

When NASA's Curiosity rover arrived at the Kimberly region of Gale crater, we went to work, looking at the mineral-filled cracks in sandstones on the floor of what was once a deep lake. We used the ChemCam instrument, which sits atop Curiosity and was developed here at Los Alamos National Laboratory, to "zap" rocks on Mars and analyze their chemical make-up. (In less than four years since landing on Mars, ChemCam has analyzed roughly 1,500 rock and soil samples.)

When ChemCam fires its laser pulse, it vaporizes an area the size of a very small pinhead. The system's telescope on the rover peers at the flash of glowing plasma created by the vaporized material and records the colors of light contained within it. This light allows us here on Earth to determine the elemental composition of the vaporized material.

And what did ChemCam discover? More rocks filled with manganese oxides. So, Caribou was not a mistake — far from it.

Why Does Manganese Matter?

We never expected to find manganese oxides on Martian rocks because we didn't think Mars ever had the right environmental conditions to create them. We can look to Earth's geological record for an explanation. More than 3 billion years ago, Earth had lots of water but no widespread deposits of manganese oxides until after photosynthesizing microbes raised the oxygen levels in our atmosphere.

Although there was already plenty of other microbial life on Earth at this time, these new photosynthetic microbes used sunlight energy in a new way and created a new type of waste product in the process: oxygen.

The Curiosity rover examines the Kimberley formation in Gale crater, Mars. In front of the rover are two holes from the rover's sample-collection drill and several dark-toned features that have been cleared of dust. These flat features are erosion-resistant fracture fills that are composed of manganese oxides, which require abundant liquid water and strongly oxidizing conditions to form. The discovery of these materials suggests that the Martian atmosphere might once have contained higher abundances of free oxygen than in the present day.

By adding oxygen to the atmosphere, these tiny microbes transformed Earth's environment. Suddenly, minerals never before formed on Earth started being deposited, including manganese oxides. This monumental environmental shift is recorded in the chemistry of rocks of that age all over the world. Earth has never been the same since. (Some hypothesize that more complex life forms, such as humans, might never have developed without this atmospheric change.)

So to Summarize: In the Earth's geological record, the appearance of high concentrations of manganese marks a major shift in our atmosphere's composition, from relatively low oxygen abundances to the oxygen-rich atmosphere we see today. The presence of the same types of materials on Mars suggests that something similar happened there. If that's the case, what formed that oxygen-rich environment?

How Did It Get There?

One way oxygen could have gotten into the Martian atmosphere is from the breakdown of water when Mars was losing its magnetic field.

Without a protective magnetic field to shield the surface from ionizing radiation, that radiation split water molecules into hydrogen and oxygen. Mars' relatively low gravity couldn't hold onto the very light hydrogen atoms, but the heavier oxygen atoms remained behind. Rocks absorbed much of this oxygen, leading to the rusty red dust that covers the surface today. While Mars' famous red iron oxides require only a mildly oxidizing environment to form, manganese oxides require a strongly oxidizing environment. Finding manganese oxides suggests that past conditions were far more oxidizing than previously thought.

What's Next?

NASA's Opportunity rover, which has been exploring Mars since 2004, also recently discovered high-manganese deposits in its landing site thousands of miles from Curiosity, which supports the idea that the conditions needed to form these materials were present well beyond Gale crater.

Of course, it's hard to confirm whether the ionizing-radiation scenario I've presented here for creating Martian atmospheric oxygen actually occurred. But it's important to note that this idea represents a departure in our understanding of how planetary atmospheres might become oxygenated. So far, abundant atmospheric oxygen has been treated as a so-called biosignature, or a sign of existing life.

The next step in this work is for scientists to better understand the relationship between manganese minerals and life. On Earth, they are highly related—but they certainly don't need to be.

So how can we tell whether the manganese on Mars might actually be made by microbes? The answer is lots and lots of laboratory experiments. If it's possible to distinguish between manganese oxides produced by life and those produced in a non-biological setting, we can apply that knowledge directly to Martian manganese observations to better understand their origin.

In the meantime, we'll keep our eyes trained on the Martian surface and see what other secrets it has to reveal.

Nina Lanza is a staff scientist at Los Alamos National Laboratory, which has built and operated more than 500 spacecraft instruments for national defense.

Issues That Could Hinder Manned Missions to Mars

OK, maybe some of these are a bit picky and I suppose the folks at NASA or the SSP have already figured out a workaround for these, since they've probably been up there for around fifty years now, but just to give you something to ponder:

Perpetual jet lag: A Martian day is 40 minutes longer than an Earth day. The human circadian rhythm is set at 24 hours. The extra 40 minutes a day on Mars would soon result in perpetual jet lag for the astronauts, leaving them constantly exhausted.

Mars time: NASA got a taste of this when mission controllers had to work on "Mars time" because the first Mars rovers had to operate during the Martian days. The entire mission control for the Sojourner kept the same time as the rover did. After one month, the controllers became fed up. For later Mars rovers, the mission controllers successfully stayed on Mars time for three months but were still completely exhausted by the end of it. It appears that humans can only endure Mars time for short periods. For astronauts staying on Mars for months, there would be no way to get away from Mars time.

Low Surface Gravity on Mars: Although scientists can easily simulate the journey to Mars by putting astronauts on the International Space Station for extended periods of time, the effect on the human body of prolonged exposure to Mars' gravity, which is only 38 percent of the surface gravity on Earth, is unknown. Will the partial gravity allow humans to retain critical muscle and bone density? If not, will exercise help? Given that any potential mission to Mars might have the astronauts spend months in Martian gravity, this is a critical question. Bone and muscle loss: Using imperfect simulators, two studies on mice found that bone and muscle loss in Martian gravity may be as severe as that found in zero gravity. The first study found that even an environment with 70 percent of Earth's gravity was unable to prevent muscle and bone loss. In the second study, researchers detected at least a 20 percent bone loss in mice from lower gravity. But remember, these studies are only simulations. Until astronauts actually land on Mars, there will be no way for us to know exactly how their bodies will adapt to lower gravity.

Rocky Martian Terrain: As Neil Armstrong discovered during his descent to the surface of the Moon, his landing site was full of gigantic boulders that posed a hazard to his lander. A similar issue could happen to astronauts landing on the surface of Mars. They would only have a short time above any landing site to detect and avoid hazards such as large rocks or sand dunes. Boulders or slopes could cause a Martian lander with landing legs to fall over when it hit the surface. Even large features in the terrain can be difficult to see from orbit, so mission planners could potentially miss them. Small trenches or hills could fool sensors into releasing the lander from its parachutes earlier than planned or confuse automated systems as to landing speed. The chances that a lander will fail due to terrain issues are surprisingly high. One study pegged the possibility as high as 20 percent.

Diameter of Payload Fairing (equipment used to protect the spacecraft): When designing a manned Mars lander, one technical issue comes up repeatedly—the diameter of the payload fairing for the rocket on which the Mars lander will launch. Even though the largest fairing under consideration is a whopping 8.4 meters (27.6 ft) in diameter, it has been extremely difficult for NASA to fit a payload fairing to the design of a manned Mars lander. (This may not apply due to the entirely new design and propulsion systems used by the SSP.

Heat shield: The rigid heat shield needed to protect a heavy payload is too large to fit into the payload fairing. So, NASA (or the SSP) needs to use an inflatable heat shield technology that's experimental at this point. Using existing designs for a Mars mission, NASA's smallest lander would be extremely cramped in the 8.4-meter fairing. Any of NASA's larger landers wouldn't fit in the fairing. Even if NASA uses the smallest lander, they will need to make awkward redesigns, which include turning a Mars rover for the astronauts upside down and redesigning the fuel tanks. The size of the fairing can't be increased because it would destabilize the rocket.

Supersonic Retro Propulsion: This may be one way to slow down a Mars lander during its final descent to the planet's surface. This involves firing rockets in the direction of travel while the spacecraft is still going faster than the speed of sound.

In the thin Martian atmosphere, supersonic retro propulsion is a must. But firing rockets at supersonic speed could create shock waves that damage a Mars lander. NASA has almost no experience with this procedure, which further complicates its chance of success.

There are three main issues with this technique. First, the interactions between the airstream and the rocket exhaust plume may shake the lander apart. Second, the heat generated by the rocket exhaust may heat up the Mars lander. Third, it may be difficult to keep the lander stable while the retro-rockets fire. Although small-scale tests in wind tunnels have been conducted, an extensive series of larger tests using real hardware is needed. This is an expensive, long-term proposition. But NASA may have another way of investigating supersonic retropropulsion. It recently observed a test by SpaceX to return its first stage to the ground, which yielded valuable data.

Static Electricity: on Mars, static electricity could cause serious problems for our astronauts. On Earth, most static discharges are caused by the insulating properties of rubber shoes. On Mars, that insulating substance would be the soil of Mars itself. Just by walking around on Mars, an astronaut could accumulate a static charge strong enough to fry delicate electronics if he tried to open air locks or touch the outside of the spacecraft. Martian soil is fine and dry, making it an ideal insulating material. The soil is up to 50 times as fine as dust on Earth. As the astronaut walked around, soil would accumulate on his suit. When the Martian wind blew it off, the astronaut would accumulate an increasing electrical charge. The Mars rovers use ultrafine needles to bleed off this electrical charge. But a manned Mars mission would require insulating space suits to protect the astronauts and equipment.

Launch Vehicle Availability: The Space Launch System (SLS) is the largest launch rocket in development for the foreseeable future. It will be the rocket that lofts a manned mission to Mars piece by piece. Under current NASA plans, a dozen SLS rockets will be required for one manned mission to Mars. But the current ground infrastructure supporting the SLS has been stripped down to its minimum requirements: one facility for rocket assembly, one massive crawler to transport the rocket to the launchpad, and one launchpad. If even one of those components breaks down, it could pose significant issues for launch vehicle availability. This availability bottleneck could pose several hazards to a manned Mars mission. For example, any delays in assembling and checking the massive SLS would have a significant impact on the launch schedule. So, could issues as mundane as weather or minor technical problems. In addition, orbital docking for the assembly of a Mars spacecraft requires the rocket to launch within a specific time period (the “launch window”). Favorable opportunities for Mars-bound ships to leave Earth’s orbit are also limited. Scientists have developed launch models using historical data on space shuttle launch availability. They show that NASA can’t be certain that the SLS rocket will be able to launch within specified launch windows, which potentially jeopardizes any Mars mission plans.

Toxic Martian Soil: In 2008, NASA’s automated Phoenix probe made a nasty discovery, it found perchlorate salts on the Martian surface. Although these toxic substances have industrial uses, they can cause issues with the thyroid gland at exceedingly small doses. On Mars, perchlorates make up at least 0.5 percent of the soil, a poisonous amount for humans. With the astronauts walking around and tracking soil into their habitats, they won’t be able to avoid getting contaminated with perchlorates. Using technology derived from dangerous mining operations on Earth, decontamination procedures may mitigate the problem to some degree. But drastic health changes might still occur as the thyroid gland is disrupted. Perchlorates have also been linked to various blood disorders. However, scientists haven’t done much research on the effects of perchlorates on the human body, making the long-term consequences difficult to predict. Astronauts might have to take artificial hormones to keep their metabolisms functioning as they grapple with the long-term effects of perchlorate exposure.

Long-Term Storage of Rocket Fuel: Rocket fuel is required to take us to Mars and back. The most efficient rocket fuels currently in use are liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen, which are cryogenic propellants. (The Secret Space Force has for the most part relying on alien propulsion systems).

Dust Storms: On Mars a dust storm can develop in a matter of hours and envelope the entire planet within a few days. They are the largest and most violent dust storms in our solar system. The Martian dust vortices tower over their earthly counterparts reaching the height of Mount Everest with winds in excess of 300 kilometers per hour. After developing, it can take months for a dust storm on Mars to completely expend itself. Hellas Basin is the deepest impact crater in the Solar System. The temperatures at the bottom of the crater can be 10 degrees warmer than on the surface and the crater is deeply filled with dust. The difference in temperature fuels wind action that picks up the dust, then the storm emerges from the basin.

Comet P67

Comet P67 became the most famous entity in the Kuiper belt after the Rosetta mission collected samples from its icy surface in 2014. Rosetta's incredible findings showed organic molecules existed in half of the dust emitted by Comet 67P.

Is this mission a part of a European Space Agency and Nasa cover-up to disguise the comet's true alien nature? An email, allegedly from a secret whistle-blowing employee of the ESA, accuses the agency of "blatant cover-ups" in wanting to land on the speeding comet and attaches photos which claim to reveal the "true inner workings of Comet 67P".

It states: "Do not think for ONE MOMENT that a space agency would suddenly decide to spend billions of dollars to build and send a spacecraft on a 12-year journey to simply take some close-up images of a randomly picked out comet floating in space."

"Comet 67P is NOT a comet," the email continues. "Some 20 years ago NASA began detecting radio bursts from an unknown origin out in space. It would later be known that these had likely come from the direction of the now named comet 67P. It does show signs on its outside of machine-like parts and unnatural terrain. Alien structures are on the comet. I don't believe it's natural."

The shape of the entire comet is that of an alien bust

Yet this is far from the only extra-terrestrial conspiracy theory put forward about 67P and the ESA mission. In September, BPEarthWatch published a video showing “brand new, hi-res” images taken from the Rosetta spacecraft and appeared to show two UFOs flying over the comet and a transmission tower-like structure built on the surface, potentially emitting the mysterious radio signals which have been picked by the ESA. “These images are not normal.”

ESA’s confirmation that the comet had been emitting a “mystery song” has fueled theories that it is in fact an alien ship and the warbling is an extra-terrestrial attempt at communication.

And the comet has again attracted prominence after a purported audio recording was used as proof of a UFO broadcast. The other-worldly audio, consisting of oscillating analogue noises, was unearthed by alien expert Scott C. Waring.

“I really feel that it holds an alien message.” “I took the singing sounds made by comet P67 and slowed them down so that we could hear them better.”

“So, this is a message that aliens created and placed on the comet to either mark their territory or to test species at a certain level of development to come and investigate. “The shape of the entire comet is that of an alien bust.”

Scott Waring further claims: “In my opinion this is not a code. It is how a species of aliens communicate to one another without speaking. A form of telepathy put into primitive radio signals. It's the only way this species can communicate to us. This is their thoughts. They don't talk."

Waring added: "Getting a copy of the full message and then translating it should be of utter importance. Is it a message of greetings? Or is it a warning of what's to come? We, the people of the world, need to find out."

Oumuamua, the 'Alien Probe' Asteroid

There have been many crazy stories about the cigar-shaped asteroid, known as Oumuamua, that scientists first detected zipping through our solar system in October 2017.

What's all the fuss about? Well, although scientists suspect interstellar visitors pass through our system with some regularity, this was the first time they had actually seen one.

Harvard scientists: Strange asteroid could be an alien 'probe'

The unusual shape and strange speed of the interstellar asteroid had astronomers puzzled. It seemed to zip past the sun in a way that scientists did not expect, grabbing an unexpected speed boost on its journey across the solar system. That led to one particular paper suggesting it might even be an alien probe, sent from the far reaches of space.

Early measurements seemed to indicate that it was an asteroid. Then astronomers came around to the conclusion that it was instead a comet — an icy body knocked out of the distant reaches of a far-off planetary system.

Now a new analysis has found inconsistencies in this conclusion, suggesting that 'Oumuamua may not be a comet after all. Whether it's actually a comet or an asteroid, 'Oumuamua is not quite like anything seen before.

The object was first spotted a year ago by scientists with the Pan-STARRS telescope in Hawaii. Other astronomers quickly joined in the hunt, measuring everything they could. (One team even trained radio telescopes on it to check whether it might be transmitting extraterrestrial broadcasts. It was not.)

By last December, a team of astronomers published 'Oumuamua's electromagnetic spectra, which can be used to probe what an object is made of. The researchers found that ices with organic material similar to those seen in comets in our solar system lurked just below 'Oumuamua's surface; that ice could have survived a long interstellar journey.

A few months later, another collaboration found that 'Oumuamua wasn't just being pulled by the sun's gravity. Instead, it was being slightly accelerated by an unseen force, which they argued could only be attributed to comet "outgassing" acting like a thruster.

Now in a new study that is currently under peer review, Roman Rafikov, an astrophysicist at the University of Cambridge, argues that the same forces that appeared to have accelerated 'Oumuamua — the same forces that should have also produced a tail — would have also affected its spin. In particular, the acceleration would have torqued 'Oumuamua to such a degree that it would have spun apart, breaking up into smaller pieces. If 'Oumuamua were a comet, he argues, it would not have survived.

In part to help resolve the impasse, researchers have tried to identify the star system where 'Oumuamua originated by combing through the newly released data troves of the Gaia space telescope. Perhaps it came from a binary star system, or a system with a giant planet, either of which could have launched the object into interstellar space.

Is it possible there might be other explanations, ones that haven't even occurred to the experts? Just wondering.

Secret Space Program Insiders, Whistleblowers and Hackers

There exists in this country a two-tier scientific culture, of which the upper tier is a domain for clandestine R&D, unknown to democratically elected authorities!

Over the years, dozens of insiders have come out of the woodwork with stories of free energy, reverse engineered UFOs, secret slave colonies, antigravity propulsion, and government cover-ups that, if ever proven true, would spark drastic and irrevocable changes to life on this planet for every one of its inhabitants. The advent of free energy technology alone would put a permanent end to poverty and hunger, freeing humanity from the rule of a tyrannical and corrupt elite who have foisted upon them war after meaningless war.

While some would say that such a monumental clandestine effort to explore space and research UFOs would be impossible to keep under wraps, it bears remembering that no one knew about the Manhattan Project (except the Russians) until the first nuclear weapons were detonated over Japan and that everyone thought Operation Northwoods, the plot to stage terrorist attacks on American soil to justify invading Cuba, was a conspiracy theory until the pertinent documentation was declassified. While many of the following testimonials may seem completely beyond belief, the alleged existence of black budget space programs is one secret that these individuals have risked everything to expose.

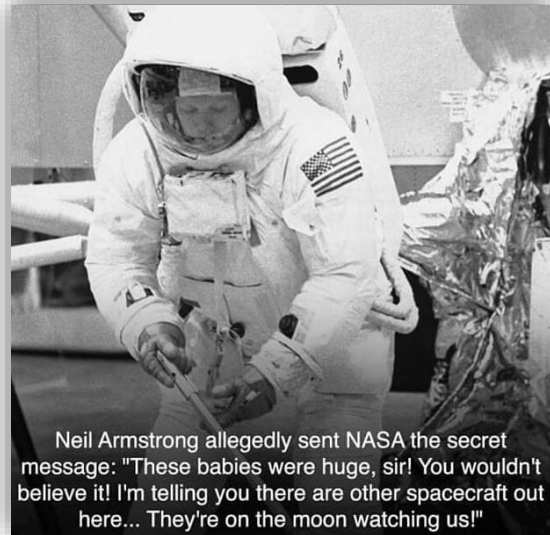

While skepticism is the heart of truth-seeking, open-mindedness is the kernel of discovery. Here are stories of individuals who claim to have insider knowledge about the secret space programs. Can they all be dismissed as nonsense? I think not. It's time to take a close look at the Secret Space Program.

Do you dare?

Astronaut Neil Armstrong

According to NASA Astronaut Neil Armstrong, the Aliens have a base on the Moon and told us in no uncertain terms to get off and stay off the Moon. According to reports, both Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin saw UFOs shortly after that historic landing on the Moon in Apollo 11 on 21 July 1969.

One of the astronauts referred to a "light" in or on a crater during the television transmission, followed by a request from mission control for further information. Nothing more was heard. According to a former NASA employee Otto Binder, unnamed radio hams with their own VHF receiving facilities that bypassed NASA's broadcasting outlets picked up the following exchange:

NASA: What's there?
Mission Control calling Apollo 11...

Apollo11: These "Babies" are huge, Sir! Enormous!
OH MY GOD! You wouldn't believe it!
I'm telling you there are other spacecraft out there,
Lined up on the far side of the crater edge!
They're on the Moon watching us!

A certain professor, who wished to remain anonymous, was engaged in a discussion with Neil Armstrong during a NASA symposium.

Professor: What REALLY happened out there with Apollo 11?

Armstrong: It was incredible, of course we had always known there was a possibility, the fact is, we were warned off! (by the Aliens). There was never any question then of a space station or a moon city.

Professor: How do you mean "warned off"?

Armstrong: I can't go into details, except to say that their ships were far superior to ours both in size and technology - Boy, were they big! and menacing!

No, there is no question of a space station.

Professor: But NASA had other missions after Apollo 11?

Armstrong: Naturally - NASA was committed at that time, and couldn't risk panic on Earth. But it really was a quick scoop and back again.

According to a Dr. Vladimir Azhazha: "Neil Armstrong relayed the message to Mission Control that two large, mysterious objects were watching them after having landed near the moon module. But this message was never heard by the public - because NASA censored it."

According to a Dr. Aleksandr Kasantsev, Buzz Aldrin took color movie film of the UFOs from inside the module and continued filming them after he and Armstrong went outside. Armstrong confirmed that the story was true but refused to go into further detail, beyond admitting that the CIA was behind the cover.

In 1979 Maurice Chatelain, former chief of NASA Communications Systems confirmed that Armstrong had indeed reported seeing two UFOs on the rim of a crater. Chatelain believes that some UFOs may come from our own solar system, specifically Titan.

"The encounter was common knowledge in NASA, but nobody has talked about it until now." "...all Apollo and Gemini flights were followed, both at a distance and sometimes also quite closely, by space vehicles of extraterrestrial origin - flying saucers, or UFOs, if you want to call them by that name.

Every time it occurred, the astronauts informed Mission Control, who then ordered absolute silence." "I think that Walter Schirra aboard Mercury 8 was the first of the astronauts to use the code name 'Santa Claus' to indicate the presence of flying saucers next to space capsules. However, his announcements were barely noticed by the general public. It was a little different when James Lovell on board the Apollo 8 command module came out from behind the moon and said for everybody to hear: 'PLEASE BE INFORMED THAT THERE IS A SANTA CLAUS.' Even though this happened on Christmas Day 1968, many people sensed a hidden meaning in those words."

The rumors persist. NASA may well be a civilian agency, but many of its programs are funded by the defense budget and most of the astronauts are subject to military security regulations. Apart from the fact that the National Security Agency screens all films and probably radio communications as well. We have the statements by Otto Binder, Dr. Garry Henderson and Maurice Chatelain that the astronauts were under strict orders not to discuss their sightings. And Gordon Cooper has testified to a United Nations committee that one of the astronauts actually witnessed a UFO on the ground. If there is no secrecy, why has this sighting not been made public?

Andrew Basiago

Laura Eisenhower isn't the only purported witness to evidence of an alleged human colony on Mars. Andrew Basiago claims to have visited a Mars colony in 1981 as part of his work for the government as a child time traveler.

Andrew was selected for this program due to his engineer father Raymond F. Basiago's involvement in the development of DARPA's Project Pegasus, a secret time travel program that Basiago wants to share with the world.

A lawyer from Vancouver, Washington. He is a notable name in the conspiracy community. Basiago claims to have been part of the time travel experiment known as Project Pegasus, under DARPA. He claims that he even traveled to Mars with a young Barack Obama. He also says that there is life on Mars and that the US government has been covering it up for over 50 years.

"Tesla teleportation", or Vorta teleportation, are terms used by Andrew Basiago to describe the type of teleportation that the Space-Time program uses. His reference to "Tesla" is a wink to Nikola Tesla for his research in the most important component that makes teleportation and time travel possible: "radiant energy. Tesla believed the 19th century concept that an all pervasive "ether" transmits electrical energy. If this theory is true, the same "ether" can transmit "radiant energy"

As part of his work with Project Pegasus, Basiago was sent back in time to witness key historical events such as the Gettysburg Address. Basiago has even produced a picture of himself attending Lincoln's momentous speech as a little boy.

Andrew was also sent to the future and learned the identity of all future US presidents up to the year 2054. Though he was well-trained by DARPA, Basiago certainly wasn't ready for the revelation that he, too, would one day occupy the Oval Office.

Basiago ran as an independent in the 2016 presidential election. Though he didn't garner many votes, he's convinced that he will serve as either president or vice president of the United States before 2028.

Given Andrew's history of presidential predictions, he might not be wrong: Before the 2016 election, he stated that he had no data on Hillary Clinton as president but remembered his father paying special attention to Donald Trump's appearance on "The Phil Donahue Show".

Matthew Bevan

Mr. Bevan, who was alleged by the USAF to have used the Net to access and alter sensitive research and development files at its Griffiths Air Force base near New York, and the Lockheed Space and Missile Company in California. After his arrest by British police, he was said to be part of a "phat" - a worldwide Internet hacking group.

McKinnon was not the first to hint at the idea of a secret space group, however. As an experienced hacker of numerous computer systems, Matthew Bevan decided back in 1994 to uncover the long-rumored "crashed UFO" secrets of Wright Patterson Air Force Base, Dayton, Ohio.

Stressing that Wright-Patterson was "a very easy computer system to get into," Bevan was utterly amazed to uncover astonishing information relating to a top-secret project to design and build a truly extraordinary flying machine of UFO like proportions. "The files," Bevan said, "very clearly referred to a working prototype of an anti-gravity vehicle that utilized a heavy element to power it. This wasn't a normal aircraft; it was very small, split level, with a reactor at the bottom and room for the crew at the top."

Having accessed and carefully digested the fantastic information, Bevan exited the Wright-Patterson computer banks and began to search just about everywhere for the alien answers that he sought, including the less than secure computer systems of NASA itself.

Bevan had got into the systems, had carefully read the files, and then made good his escape, all without any form of detection whatsoever. Or, so Bevan had assumed was the case. History, however, has shown that Bevan's initial assumptions were very wide of the mark. For approximately two years there was nothing but overwhelming silence. Then, on one morning in 1996, everything suddenly changed drastically in the life of Matthew Bevan.

At the time when things began to go distinctly awry, he was working for an insurance company in Cardiff, Wales, and on the day in question he was summoned down to the managing director's office. On entering the room, Bevan was confronted by a group of men in suits who seemed to practically ooze intimidation. Bevan recalled what happened next: "One of the men outstretched his hand and I shook it."

"Matthew Bevan?" the man asked. "Yes," replied Bevan.

The man identified himself as being with Scotland Yard's Computer Crimes Unit: "I'm placing you under arrest for hacking NASA and Wright Patterson Air Force Base." Bevan was in deep trouble. On being taken to Cardiff Central Police Station, the line of questioning became decidedly curious and worthy of an episode of the X-Files: "What does the term Hangar 18 mean to you?" Bevan was immediately asked, in stern and intimidating tones.

"That's a hoarding place for alien technology," he replied, in a quite matter of fact fashion.

Bevan's recollections of that exchange were more than eye-opening. "Throughout the interview, they kept coming back to Hangar 18: Did I see anything on the Wright Patterson and the NASA computers? Did I download anything?

Well, when they asked me if I saw anything, I said: 'Yes, I saw emails talking about an anti-gravity propulsion system.'" Needless to say, this did not go down too well, at all, with Scotland Yard's Computer Crimes Unit, as it was known back then.

Bevan correctly realized that he was in very hot water with the authorities, and a date was subsequently set for a hearing at London's Bow Street magistrate's court. But: it was not just Bevan, his defense, and the prosecution who were present at the trial. There was also a man present representing the interests of the U.S. Government and NASA.

A curious exchange occurred when the man took the stand – as Bevan remembered only too well. "As the hearing continued, the prosecution asked him what the American Government thought about my motives regarding my hacking at NASA and at Wright Patterson."

The man replied: "We now believe that Mr. Bevan had no malicious intentions and that his primary purpose was to uncover information on UFOs and Hangar 18."

Bevan said: "Well, everyone had a bit of a laugh at that point, even the judge; however, when the prosecution asked: 'Can you confirm if Hangar 18 exists or if it's a myth?' the man said: 'I can neither confirm nor deny as I'm not in possession of that information.'"

The final outcome of the affair was that the case against Bevan completely collapsed. The magistrate overseeing the matter stated in no uncertain terms that a jail sentence was utterly out of the question, and that any financial punishment he might be able to impose upon Bevan would be meager in the extreme.

Coupled with the fact that neither NASA nor the American Government as a whole was willing to divulge any and all information concerning the contents of the material on the Wright Patterson computers to the British court, and the cost of prosecuting the case was perceived as being as high as $10,000 a day, the prosecution grudgingly elected to offer zero evidence. Bevan's last word on the matter: "Although I didn't print or download anything – I read it all online – I know what I read: America has a secret space plane."

Dr. Dan Burisch

Dr. Burisch, is a Micro-biologist who worked at S-4 on the Area 51 base and has given us many ideas to ponder. His comment Regarding Bob Lazar who claimed to have worked there:

From the standpoint of Mr. Lazar's description of the S-4 Galileo Bay (4-1), he was accurate. I have seen and interacted on all four main floors, have seen all four sub-floor access levels and have interacted in three of those four. (Although, should Mr. Lazar, or anyone else for that matter) have claimed to have removed any E115 (Element 115) from S-4, that would be an inaccurate statement as NOTHING ever gets out of S-4,

So, who is Dr. Dan Burisch and what is he all about? Let's start with: Bio-warfare, mind-connects with a living extraterrestrial, angel visits on a daily basis, designer viruses that incorporate lethal ET strains, stargate transmissions, remote viewing, astrology, Catholic-mysticism, Judaic-kabbalah, human subjects, abductions, treaties with extraterrestrials, Area-51, abducted when 9 years old, a Ganesh particle that conveys healing and possibly immortality, covert operations, pole shifts, fate of the planet, black ops, broken bones from heavy-handed handlers and a 4" x 1/4" scar up the back of his head.

And this is just part of the story of Dr. Burisch. No story about the Secret Space Program can be complete without including Dr. Burisch. When you first read about his unbelievable involvement in unbelievable programs, well... it's just unbelievable!

There is so much to the Secret Space Program that is now being revealed at an even faster pace than just a short time ago that it is hard for your brain to accept everything that has been going on. Could our government have been pulling this off without our knowledge?

But now, with so much bizarre information being released by so many players, most from high-level, scientific positions, that we can no longer dismiss it just because it hurts our brains to even comprehend all the possibilities!

And what about the time that it was revealed that the natural stargate at Frenchman's Mountain East of Las Vegas was going to be activated on a certain day at a certain time? And reportedly a real-time satellite image of the location showed the entire mountain began to "glow" on the screen in front of them from a government website that was publicly available!

There is even a story going around about his knowledge of how to make the Ganesh particle, which is purported to have healing and regenerative powers analogous to the

For the most part, the knowledge for this project was received telepathically from a J-rod extraterrestrial with whom he worked for one year in a special chamber in S4 at Area 51.

Then there is the faction called the "rogue aliens" who supposedly want Dr. Burisch dead before he can complete the Lotus Project. And he also revealed a covert group of individuals calling the shots who want to rid the world population of "undesirable" elements in the gene pool. Supposedly, they have, or are in process of creating genetically engineered tools of selective mass destruction.

According to the J-rod "yellow book" that shows past, present, and future developments on earth, they are actually progeny of earthlings travelling back in time to fix something bad that happened in their history at this period of time. These were both natural and man-made caused by a function of choices made by earthlings. The J-rods claim to have descended from a group of humans that relocated from Earth to Mars and then on to a neighboring star system.

(You may want to check out my report on the Yellow Book – Info is on page 154)

Boyd Bushman

Boyd Bushman, Area 51 scientist, recorded an incredible deathbed confession. Boyd insisted that aliens had made contact with Earth, and that he, along with numerous other scientists, had been working on 'reverse engineering' alien technology.

As well as showing a set of photos of aliens, Bushman insisted that "with respect to the alien craft, we have American citizens who are working on UFOs 24 hours a day. We are trying to learn what to do."

(Those photos he showed were considered by many to be a joke. Was he slipping in his later years, or was he trying to send us a message? Recently I've had the impression that the government is now trying to get us to believe in the conventional appearing aliens to throw us off the track that the aliens working by our side on top-secret projects, like at S-4. look just like us and could pass as humans!)

What makes this story particularly fascinating is Bushman was no low-level crank. He was a senior research engineer for Lockheed Martin, and a gifted inventor. He has 28 patents to his name from a career spanning 40 years – so he was one who deserves to be listened too.

"A great deal of information should be lifted up from those dark recesses of Area 51 and moved over so people can see it." he states.

"Since I am a scientist, I do not believe in theory. I say follow the data... If something cannot be verified by a physical test that something is true, then I do not care to accept it. Therefore, everything I present here will be data that comes directly from Area 51 to you."

Bushman then goes on to claim that Area 51 contains two groups of aliens, all of whom have long fingers and webbed feet, and hail from a planet known as Quintumnia. Some of his claims may have seemed a bit strange but consider he was on his death bed and may have been a bit confused and I am not the one to judge that.

Yes, he made some claims in 2014 that may have been surprising to most folks, but you and me probably aren't shocked over his claims about real aliens working at Area 51, faster than light travel and work on anti-gravity technology, right?

Astronaut Scott Carpenter

"At no time, when the astronauts were in space, were they alone: there was a constant surveillance by UFOs."

One has to believe that Scott Carpenter and other astronauts saw UFOs while in space. They were sworn to secrecy for national security. When you talk to former astronauts, in a private setting, you know they witnessed more than what was reported.

Scott Carpenter offered his opinion that the evidence for such "alien" contact was "very strong" and "classified" by governments, who were covering up visitations and the existence of alien beings' bodies in places such as Roswell, New Mexico.

He further claimed that UFOs had provided "sonic engineering secrets" that were helpful to the U.S. Government.

Colonel Philip Corso

In 1997, former Pentagon intelligence officer and White House staffer Colonel Philip Corso's book, The Day After Roswell, lifted the veil on much of the clandestine research pursued since 1947 by various branches of the federal government and compartmentally outsourced to defense contractors such as Lockheed, Boeing, McDonnell Douglas, Martin Marietta, Northrop, Grumman, Raytheon, General Dynamics and others. However, the results of those advanced investigations remained largely undisclosed, although Corso claimed that major technical breakthroughs such as micro-transistors, superconductors, fiber optics, Kevlar and night vision goggles had been developed through reverse engineering of alien materials. (And I'm sure that there was much more technology that wasn't available to him or was so highly classified that he didn't dare disclose it!)

Randy Cramer

Randy Cramer was treated to a much longer tour of Mars than Basiago's brief recon mission. According to Cramer's testimony, he was stationed on Mars for 17 years as a captain in the Marine Corps's "Special Section." Cramer says that Special Section was created by President Eisenhower to balance the unchecked power of the MJ-12 group and claims that he was part of a Mars Defense Force composed of elite members of Special Section.

In 2014, Cramer was given the go-ahead to tell his full story by a Special Section brigadier general. Ever since, Randy has been sharing his experiences as a space Marine and spacecraft pilot with the world.

Cramer claims that a secret space program within the US Navy established a base on the Moon in the 1950s and another on Mars in the 1960s. He also says that the atmosphere on Mars is breathable in the equatorial regions, that the planet is inhabited by multiple indigenous races. Corroborating the testimony of a number of other secret space program insiders, Cramer states that he was age-regressed at the end of his 20-year tour. After returning to his teenage body, it took Randy quite some time to regain any memory of his military service in space.

Robert O. Dean

Bob Dean's life changed forever when an Air Force colonel brusquely slapped an 8-inch document on his desk and said, "Here, read this. This will wake you up." At least, that's what Dean says happened one sleepy night in NATO's War Room during his service as a master sergeant from 1963 to 1967.

Usually reserved for the eyes of those holding "Cosmic Top Secret" clearance and above, the document that Dean claims to have witnessed detailed NATO's three-year investigation into the UFO phenomenon, which employed the services of physicists, astronomers, sociologists, and theologians. According to Dean, the document concluded that extraterrestrials were not a threat to humanity and had been visiting the Earth for hundreds of years.

In his career as a professional ufologist, Dean has sought to corroborate these claims by pointing out instances of saucer-like objects in ancient cave drawings and classical pieces of art. Though it's confirmed that he served his country for decades in the armed forces, many have disputed Dean's unsubstantiated claims regarding his access to the NATO report. These sustained assaults on his credibility haven't stopped Bob from making the UFO convention circuit and appearing in various interviews.

Tom DeLonge

This former Blink-182 frontman has even bigger things in mind than the band. Tom is the founder and CEO of To The Stars Academy, a unique initiative that seeks to add new momentum to alien disclosure. He's attracted a bevy of respectable contributors to his cause and has some interesting stories to tell about the path that has led him from world-renowned rock star to aspiring NASA competitor.

According to DeLonge, his interest in UFOs dates back to his Blink-182 days, when he would spend every free moment he had on the Internet looking for evidence to prove the existence of intelligent extraterrestrials.

This amateur interest somehow evolved into actual contact from government agencies, and before long, DeLonge was visiting the Pentagon and being flown around the country to meet with various generals and private interests. It seemed that the United States military industrial complex had decided to start revealing UFO information and wanted to use DeLonge as the face of their disclosure.

Suffice to say, public reception of DeJonge's change in career has been mixed. Those who think he's at least partially telling the truth worry that his entire initiative might be some kind of government disinformation campaign. And while there are still those who think he's making it up, these voices have grown quieter with the addition of more and more distinguished names to the ranks of the To The Stars team and the release of the recent UFO-themed New York Times article.. According to DeLonge, the Navy video released with the article is "only the tip of the spear," with many more disclosures to come.

(Not to knock any of this but this Navy video that was released is old info that has been around for a long time. I had some of the photos on my website a few years ago. Although the release of the actual video may be new.

Richard Dolan

"Slowly, by degrees, I have come to the opinion that there is a secret space program. I recall, for instance, wondering about the alleged anomalies on Mars early on in my research. Back then, I was in correspondence with an individual who had impressive scientific and intelligence credentials. Attempting to feel him out on the topic, I wrote something a bit flippant about Mars, primarily to see what his reaction would be. Sure enough, he replied soberly that I should not dismiss these anomalies, that there were in fact many people within the classified world who took them seriously.

"That's when I realized, very concretely, that the notion of space anomalies was indeed a serious topic. I began to consider: if there is covert interest in the anomalies on Mars, would there be a covert space program to investigate? To this day, I don't know the answer with certainty, but over the years I have encountered no shortage of quiet, serious-minded people who tell me of their knowledge that there is such a covert program. One component of this, it appears, has to do with the Moon. Are there bases on the far side of the Moon? Again, I do not know for sure, but I cannot rule it out. More than once, people I consider to be informed insiders have steered me in this direction.

"Look at it this way. If you believe there are anomalies on Mars, and if you acknowledge strange activity in Earth's orbit, you would have a very good reason to initiate a secret space program, would you not? You would want a way to investigate these things in a way that would not be seen by the prying eyes of the public.

“I’ve also come to the opinion over the years that part of the classified world – the part that deals with the ET reality – has essentially “broken away” from our own conventional civilization. That is, utilizing the jumpstart they received by studying exotic, alien technology, they have very likely achieved scientific breakthroughs that they have not shared with the rest of us. I think that these breakthroughs have enabled them to employ technologies substantially beyond what we are using, and that in all likelihood this too has contributed to their secret space program.

“It’s important to emphasize that the above is primarily conjecture on my part. I consider it my working hypothesis. Proving it will take a great deal of effort and dedication. It also means not being sucked in by every new person who has claimed to have traveled to Mars. We need to remain clear headed.” –Richard Dolan

Richard Doty

The UFO research community has good reason to fear disinformation agents in their ranks. For years, Richard Doty made a habit of reaching out to ufologists and contactees and presenting them with a proposition. Telling them that he was with the government, he would then offer up all the secrets of UFOs in exchange for their cooperation. While the effects of this disinformation campaign seem to have been largely harmless, one of Doty’s famous victims was Paul Bennewitz, an electronics engineer who lived near the base where Doty was stationed. Over the years, Doty and his team fed the UFO-seeking Bennewitz lies until he suffered a complete mental breakdown.

Yet it remains unknown whether Doty was spinning a web of pure deception or whether some of his information may have been based in truth. His testimony in the documentary film “Unacknowledged” seems to indicate that he was indeed aware of the existence of real UFO crashes and reverse engineered technologies capable of taking human beings into the far reaches of space. But coming from the mouth of a professional government con man, anything Doty says is certainly suspect.

Laura Eisenhower

Laura Eisenhower is the great-granddaughter of decorated World War II general and president of the United States Dwight D. Eisenhower. During his farewell address, President Eisenhower warned about the unwarranted influence that had been gained by the military-industrial complex. According to her testimony, Laura Eisenhower witnessed the mind-bending results of this unrestrained power for herself in 2006.

Eisenhower reports that she has been targeted by dark forces since birth due to her ancestry. In 2006, she was tricked into falling in love with an agent of the shadow government. This man, referred to as “Agent X,” pestered her incessantly about joining a human colony on Mars. She was able to extricate herself from this arrangement and has been touring the ufology conference circuit ever since.

Laura Eisenhower is convinced that her great-grandfather was an ardent opponent of an occult cabal that has been secretly governing world affairs for centuries with extraterrestrial assistance and which reared its head in the form of the Third Reich.

Eisenhower isn’t convinced that the powers represented by the Nazis ended with World War II, and she has dedicated her life to dismantling the unwarranted influence about which her ancestor warned the world.

Luis Elizondo

On December 16th, 2017, The New York Times released an article called “Glowing Auras and ‘Black Money’: The Pentagon’s Mysterious UFO Program.” This investigatory piece centered around a declassified UFO video released by the Department of Defense and the testimony of Luis Elizondo, one-time head of the Pentagon’s Advanced Aerospace Threat Identification Program.

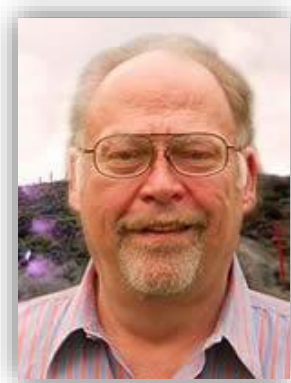

The short video shot from a Navy fighter jet appears to depict a saucer-shaped object flying above the clouds before abruptly rotating sideways. Since the UFO was matching the speed of the jet filming it, the G-forces involved in such a maneuver would have been far more than a human pilot would have been able to withstand. Yet Elizondo believes there's compelling evidence that the pilot may not have been human.

Supposedly closed down in 2012, the Advanced Aerospace Threat Identification Program was tasked with locating UFOs in the skies and was apparently also involved in the recovery of downed craft. In an interview with CNN, Elizondo stated that he had seen enough during his tenure in the program to be convinced that human beings aren't the only intelligent life in the universe.

After quitting the Pentagon in October 2016, Elizondo went on to join the ranks of Hal Puthoff, Steve Justice, Chris Mellon, and Tom DeLonge as a core member of a recently founded initiative called "To The Stars Academy".

Edgar Fouché

Aeronautics engineer Edgar Fouché, having worked for the Aurora Project at Area 51 which built the secret Tr3-B triangular mercury plasma fueled spacecraft.

Edgar Fouche claims that the United States Air Force is in possession of at least two different Top Secret Nuclear Powered "Anti-Gravity" Flying Triangles classified by the USAF as TR-3B's. According to Fouche the USAF is in possession of both a smaller prototype craft which is 200 feet across, and a larger operational version which is 600 feet across (that's 2 football fields wide!).

Ed Fouche claims that these vehicles are used as space platforms by a Secret Space Program. that he personally saw the TR-3B on three separate occasions while stationed at Groom Lake in the Air Force. Note: At least one person who was associated with him has accused him of fabricating information and being very manipulative.

Corey Goode

If even ten percent of what Corey Goode claims ever ends up being proven true, humanity is due for a brutal wake-up call. Goode has been making the ufology convention circuit since 2015 to share his unique message. Considered life-changing to those who believe and infinitely entertaining to those who don't, Goode's testimony includes assertions that he was recruited into a secret space program as a teenager and served for 20 years in a spacefaring branch of the US Navy. During his tour of duty, he supposedly had access to sources of information that paint a picture of human history very different from the one with which we're familiar.

He alleges that Antarctica is absolutely filled with ancient ruins and that alien technology is buried just below the ice. He goes on to claim that this icy continent used to house extraterrestrial refugees that bred with humans to create a master race which once ruled the planet. Those wondering if any of these fanciful claims could possibly bear a grain of truth won't have to wait long for confirmation: Goode and researcher David Wilcock both assert that a full disclosure event is coming soon that will utterly reframe our understanding of history and the role that planet Earth plays in the wider universe.

Not all UFO sightings can be passed off as hoaxes or weather balloons. The question is whether these mysterious objects are visitors from other worlds or examples of undisclosed human technology.

Besides funding, a secret space program would also need personnel. Over the years, whistle-blowers have emerged at significant personal risk to share stories of their involvement in such covert operations. They have described their experiences in great detail and have independently corroborated each other's testimonies. Most of the attention that they have received has been negative.

Corey claims to have worked with multiple secret space programs, the complexity of programs, technologies and their dynamic interrelations is far greater than anything previously revealed.

The overall scope of his information he is revealing on these secret space programs appears destined to dwarf anything released by prior whistleblowers. Already according to David Wilcock, who has spent 22 years researching whistleblower testimony on extraterrestrial life and the secret space programs, Corey knew almost as much as all the others had told me combined."

Among Corey's core claims is that the oldest of up to five rival secret space programs to emerge in the modern era, "Solar Warden", contains more dated technologies but has a greater dedication to humanity's long-term interests. Those in charge of Solar Warden have decided to leak information about the existence of secret space programs by, for example, allowing their spacecraft to be photographed by the International Space Station.

These pro-disclosure actions along with "service-to-other" activities has made the Solar Warden program the most suitable candidate for a powerful new group of highly evolved extraterrestrials that has allegedly entered into our solar system which has significantly changed the dynamic between rival space programs, and their respective relations with visiting extraterrestrial civilizations and older ancient human space programs.

The “Sphere Alliance,” according to Corey, directly deals only with the Solar Warden program and is seeking to assist humanity in a series of conferences whereby private citizens meet secret space program representatives in a secure environment.

His claim that he was age and time-regressed in his earlier service with the secret space program, makes it unlikely that any hard evidence or documentation will be found to corroborate his prior covert space service. However, his more recent claims of being physically taken to conferences organized by the Sphere Alliance can be verified if other attendees step forward.

A common psychological warfare tool is to mix lots of false information with genuine information to hide the truth in plain sight. Indeed, Gordon Duff, founder of the popular website Veterans Today, claims that as much as 40% of the information released about the secret space program, is disinformation designed to protect sources and methods.

Is Corey’s testimony part of an elaborate psychological warfare operation; or is he revealing the truth about genuine unfolding events involving multiple secret space programs and extraterrestrial visitors?

The information Corey has released so far is consistent with what other whistleblowers have revealed as Wilcock has concluded.

Steven Greer

Steven Greer has become one of the loudest voices demanding full disclosure of extraterrestrial contact, but this former trauma surgeon had other plans in mind when he first started exploring the UFO phenomenon.

Accepting the supposition at a young age that extraterrestrials were visiting the Earth, he wanted to be the person to organize the diplomatic apparatus that would interface with these mysterious visitors. But decades of petitioning prominent Washington lawmakers and power brokers, appearing before the National Press Club, and serving as the main source for the recent UFO documentary Unacknowledged have pushed Greer firmly into the limelight as a dedicated antagonist of the alleged extraterrestrial cover-up.

Over the course of his career, Greer has met with dozens of supposed secret space program insiders, acquired thousands of documents to back up his claims, and has founded two organizations to promote the release of secret technologies and disclosure of ET contact.

Greer claims that among the technologies obtained from downed alien spacecraft is the secret of free energy, which he asserts has been kept from the public due to the immense profits made from the sale of oil, coal, and natural gas. Greer repeatedly petitioned high-ranking members of the US government to disclose what they knew about extraterrestrials until he concluded that the pertinent information was being hidden even from the president of the United States.

Since then, he has redoubled his efforts in popularizing the ET phenomenon among the public and has appeared in the documentary films Sirius and Unacknowledged. One of the more bizarre claims that Greer makes in the latter film is that Marilyn Monroe didn't die of a drug overdose but rather was on the verge of holding a press conference disclosing everything she'd learned from John and Robert Kennedy about UFOs and was silenced before she could reveal her secrets.

Niara Isley

Between 1979 and 1984, Niara Isley served in the United States Air Force as an airman first class. She was stationed at Nellis Air Force Base as a radar specialist and helped fighter pilots learn how to avoid radar detection. While her day job was largely mundane, Niara alleges that she was also given special assignments that still haunt her to this day.

Isley reports that on one occasion, she was taken from her apartment by Air Force officers late at night. Without any explanation, she was driven out into the middle of the desert in a radar van and instructed to track anything that came out of the sky. When a gigantic, buzzing UFO came to a stop about 46 meters

The horrors truly began after Niara was driven to an undisclosed location immediately after her UFO encounter. She reports that she was injected with a drug that made it feel as if "the molecular bond between her molecules was being dissolved

Niara relates that on another occasion, she was conveyed to the Moon in a reverse-engineered UFO. While in transit, she caught a glimpse of a tall reptilian alien who she believes may have been the pilot of the craft. When she arrived on the Moon, she was stationed at a secret Moon base.

Bob Lazar

Though Bob Lazar never really wanted to be lumped in with the UFO crowd, he remains the man who ignited popular interest in the secretive Nevada military base known as Area 51. In 1993, Lazar became one of the very first purported UFO insiders to break the veil of secrecy, motivated by what he described as concerns about the way in which the UFO subject was being handled. Lazar claims to hold advanced degrees in electronics and physics from CalTech and MIT, though both institutions insist that they have no records of his attendance.

An old phone directory seems to corroborate Lazar's assertion that he once worked for Los Alamos, though any official records of employment, along with his hospital birth records, have disappeared without a trace. (Although I heard that he was able to come up pay stubs for the company that claims he didn't work for them.) (Note: Bob could be guilty of exaggerating certain claims, and I'm not the one to judge him on that. He definitely had powerful information to share with all of us. Just because school and education records disappear, doesn't necessarily mean he lied. Actually, it could prove that he was telling the truth and the government was desperately trying to discredit him. Destroying your records is easy for the government and has the fingerprints of them being out to discredit him and silence him.

Lazar reports that he was part of a team of scientists assigned to the top-secret base north of Las Vegas known as S4. His work at this camouflaged base built into the sandy hillside consisted of inspecting captured extraterrestrial spacecraft for the purposes of reverse engineering. His schematics of the UFO which he calls the "sport model" look like the archetypal saucer shape replicated in thousands of toys and films. In the course of his research, Lazar discovered that the sport model, along with the other saucer-shaped craft he inspected, appeared to be propelled by amplified gravity waves.

Lazar claimed to have being recruited by the Office of Naval Intelligence (ONI), through defense contractor EG&G, to work as part of a team on a highly classified project which involved examining and reverse engineering a 52 feet wide saucer-shaped craft that he quickly realized was not built by humans.

He further explained that it was made of some unknown ceramic-like material, could sit three small sized (3 feet tall) crew members and was powered by a hitherto undiscovered super-heavy element, eventually identified as number 115 on the periodic table, which generated its own gravitational field and enabled the craft to reach fantastic speeds.

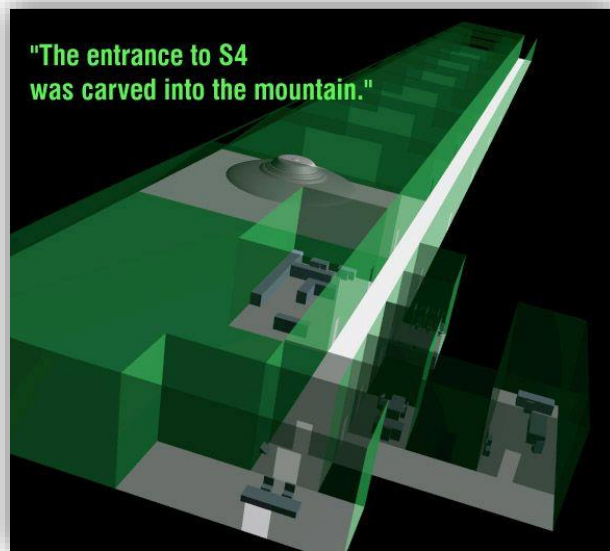

Lazar further explained that the retrieved space vehicle was being test flown in Area 51/S-4 although neither its materials nor its propulsion systems could be figured out or reproduced. However, he warned that the US military had somehow gotten hold of a substantial quantity of Element 115, stored at Los Alamos and intended for weaponization. His report was supported by well-connected investigators, including John Lear, son of the Learjet inventor and a veteran CIA operative who testified that he was also exposed to covert research into “alien” technologies.

Bob portrayed the S-4 (Sector-4) complex as having been built into the bottom of the Papoose Range with nine aircraft style hangar doors angled at 60 degrees.

Bob Lazar stated that the “Sport Model” Flying Disc amplified the “Strong Nuclear Force” of Element 115 (UnUnPentium or UUP) to generate the gravity field for “Space-Time Compression.” Bob also stated that the U.S. Government had 500 pounds of Element 115 in their possession.

The raw Element 115 was given to the U.S. Government at S4 by the Reticulan EBEs (Extraterrestrial Biological Entity) in the form of discs. The scientists at S4 sent the Element 115 discs through Groom Lake to Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, to be milled for use in the Anti-Matter Reactor.

In Lazar's first interview he talked about Element 115. Fifteen years later in 2004 scientific breakthrough, however, provides significant credibility to Bob Lazar's claims rather than discrediting his claims, when scientists at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, in collaboration with researchers from the Joint Institute for Nuclear Research in Russia (JINR), announced that they discovered two new super-heavy elements, Element 113 and Element 115. The Isotope of Element 115, produced by bombarding an Americium-243 ( $^{95}\text{Am}243$ ) nucleus with a Calcium-48 ( $^{20}\text{Ca}48$ ) nucleus, rapidly decayed to Element 113. then continued to decay until a meta-stable isotope was obtained.

In 2006 NASA had officially talked about the Antimatter reactor:

"Some antimatter reactions produce blasts of high energy gamma rays. Gamma rays are like X-rays on steroids. They penetrate matter and break apart molecules in cells, so they are not healthy to be around. High-energy gamma rays can also make the engines radioactive by fragmenting atoms of the engine material.

The NASA Institute for Advanced Concepts (NIAC) is funding a team of researchers working on a new design for an antimatter-powered spaceship that avoids this nasty side effect by producing gamma rays with much lower energy.

Antimatter is sometimes called the mirror image of normal matter because while it looks just like ordinary matter, some properties are reversed. For example, normal electrons, the familiar particles that carry electric current in everything from cell phones to plasma TVs, have a negative electric charge. Anti-electrons have a positive charge, so scientists dubbed them "positrons".

When antimatter meets matter, both annihilate in a flash of energy. This complete conversion to energy is what makes antimatter so powerful. Even the nuclear reactions that power atomic bombs come in a distant second, with only about three percent of their mass converted to energy.

Previous antimatter-powered spaceship designs employed antiprotons, which produce high-energy gamma rays when they annihilate. The new design will use positrons, which make gamma rays with about 400 times less energy."

Bob doesn't regret coming public, but these days, he's more focused on his scientific supply company and consulting work than he is on spreading the word about extraterrestrials. He and his wife now live in the boondocks to avoid UFO fanatics and are in no way trying to capitalize on his wild claims.

Interestingly, part of his 1993 disclosure was the assertion that the antimatter engines in the UFOs that he inspected ran on something called element 115. This part of his story seemed like pure fiction until scientists were successfully able to synthesize element 115, aka Moscovium, in a lab in 2003.

John Lear

Bob Lear is remembered as the inventor of the Learjet. But according to his son, John, Bob Lear was also involved in developing antigravity aircraft for the United States government. According to William Tompkins, another secret space program insider who alleges that he telepathically received information from Nordic extraterrestrials on how to build advanced spacecraft, aviation companies like Lear's were regularly supplied with blueprints drafted by Tompkins's team that instructed them how to construct alien reproduction vehicles (ARVs).

John Lear's secret space program connections don't end there: In the 1980s, Lear befriended Bob Lazar, a whistle-blower who reportedly helped reverse-engineer alien spacecraft in Area 51. According to Lear, Lazar was initially skeptical about the existence of UFOs. But when Lear convinced him to pull some strings and arrange a job at Area 51, Lazar was soon inviting his friends out to the desert to watch Wednesday night test flights every week.

Lazar's employers didn't take too kindly with his loose lips, and he was soon out of a job. But while Lazar has chosen to shun the UFO community, John Lear has chosen to remain involved with the disclosure movement and share a lifetime's worth of research on secret space programs.

Astronaut Edgar Mitchell

Edgar Mitchell of Apollo 14 fame was the sixth man to walk on the Moon and always signed his correspondences accordingly. But Mitchell became somewhat of an embarrassment to NASA later in life when his passions for meditation, spirituality, and alternative healing led him into the arms of the ufology community, and the classified information with which he had supposedly been entrusted started spilling out. Before his death in 2016, Mitchell stated that not only was the Roswell incident a real instance of a downed alien spacecraft, but the extraterrestrial entities that crashed there had been observing military tests of nuclear weapons.

Mitchell revealed to the world in an interview in 2008 that the government cover-up of extraterrestrial visitation and the space exploration technologies derived from recovered UFOs had begun with the Roswell crash and continues on to the present day. He claimed to have been let in on this information due to his ranking position as an Apollo astronaut. NASA was quick to debunk his assertions, but in doing so, the space agency appears to have gotten a bit ahead of their skis. Mitchell never stated that NASA was involved in the UFO cover-up, but NASA still went out of their way to state that they were involved in no such activity. Mitchell also never claimed that NASA tracked UFOs, yet the space agency still felt the need to clarify that this wasn't one of their functions, either.

Mitchell agreed with claims made by other supposed insiders that the main reason UFOs are being covered up isn't to avoid a panic but to suppress the technologies that power these craft. When confronted with the majesty of outer space during his Apollo mission, Mitchell experienced a profound spiritual awakening that no doubt contributed to his urge to share what he knew with the public.

Gary McKinnon

One person who is convinced that there is a secret space group is Gary McKinnon, the British man who had the wrath of the US Government hanging over his head for the best part of a decade after very unwisely deciding to hack the US Government for their secrets of UFOs and the space fleet in 2001.

According to McKinnon, while illegally surfing around classified systems of both NASA and the US military, he came across a list titled “Non-Terrestrial Officers.” McKinnon said of this discovery: “It doesn’t mean little green men. What I think it means is not Earth-based. I found a list of fleet-to-fleet transfers, and a list of ship names. I looked them up. They weren’t U.S. Navy ships. What I saw made me believe they have some kind of spaceships, off-planet.”

In 2002, Gary McKinnon was arrested for hacking into 97 US military and NASA computers. McKinnon was convinced that the U.S. Government was withholding information on UFOs from the public. Most importantly, McKinnon claims that government agencies have covered up information on the type of technology that extraterrestrials have used to reach Earth: zero-point energy.

Also known as free energy, the release of zero-point energy technology would save the environment from the dangers of fossil fuels and disrupt the prevailing economic system to the point of collapse. Many UFO researchers claim that keeping zero-point energy from the public is the main reason why knowledge of extraterrestrial contact has been suppressed.

While perusing NASA’s secret archives using his 56K modem, McKinnon came across a massive depository of photographs of UFOs that had been edited out of satellite imagery.

By dialing down the image quality levels, McKinnon was able to catch a glimpse of a picture depicting a silvery cigar-shaped UFO with geodesic spheres on each side before NASA caught wind of what was going on and severed his connection.

McKinnon also gained access to a secret NASA Excel spreadsheet titled “Non-Terrestrial Officers.” This database contained names of US Air Force officers that aren’t listed anywhere else and information on ship-to-ship transfers between ships that don’t officially exist.

Dr. Philip Morrison

In June 2017, a 47-page top secret briefing document was leaked and analyzed by various experts. It appears to be a briefing dictated by a member of the clandestine MJ-12 agency (set up to deal with UFO related issues in 1954) for Dr. Philip Morrison, an eminent MIT physicist.

It contains detailed descriptions of alien craft and their recovery, transcripts of communications with alien beings and spells out the measures taken by concerned agencies to keep the entire subject secret, even to the highest elected authorities.

Pete Peterson

Pete Peterson alleges that his grandfather was Nikola Tesla's engineering assistant. Peterson grew up learning a version of science far different from that which is taught in mainstream educational systems, and in the eighth grade, he built an antenna so powerful that it caught the attention of the US government. He was hired by the government as a young teenager and began working on the development of secret spacecraft.

According to his testimony, Peterson also built a 144-core phoon-based computer chip capable of solving incredibly complex equations in a fraction of the time taken by the fastest conventional supercomputers.

Peterson attests to knowledge of an advanced ancient civilization buried under the sands of the Sahara

Desert, alien tunnels under the Nazca lines in Peru, and a Nazi breakaway civilization that infiltrated the US Government in the 1950s.

Pete Peterson is one of esoteric researcher David Wilcock's main insiders, and the claims of this UFO researcher have corroborated the testimonies given by other insiders such as Corey Goode, William Tompkins, and Wilcock's anonymous source known only as "Jacob."

Don Phillips

Phillips was in the Air Force at a Las Vegas area Air Force Base during an event when UFOs were seen moving at enormous speeds near Mt. Charleston, northwest of Las Vegas. In addition, he worked with Kelly Johnson at the Lockheed Skunkworks -- on design and construction of the U-2 and SR-71 Blackbird.

He claimed that we not only have these extraterrestrial devices but have also achieved tremendous technological advances from their study. He states that in the 1950's and 1960's, NATO did research into the origin of ET races, and disseminated reports to the leaders of various countries.

He lists a few of the technologies we were able to develop because of ET's: computer chips, lasers, night vision, and bulletproof vests. Mr. Phillips now develops technologies that can help eliminate environmental pollutants and reduce the need for fossil fuels in the craft.

Physicist Jack Sarfatti

Theoretical physicist Jack Sarfatti suggests that the technology behind the Tic Tac UFO (2004 incident off the USS Nimitz) is not mysterious at all, it folds space into a warp drive in such a way as to get to where and when it desires with tiny amounts of energy. Sarfatti claimed we can build our own Tic Tac-style craft quickly and that it would be in America's best interests to do so, as Russia already has a head start. Such spacecraft would render all our conventional weapons obsolete, he remarked, particularly if the warp capacity was weaponized. Sarfatti revealed he was contacted as a child in the 1950s "by what I think is the intelligence behind the Tic Tacs we're seeing today...It said it was a conscious computer aboard a spacecraft from the future." He believes that many of the UFO visitors have time travel capabilities.

Note: Not to take away from Sarfatti's conclusions, just wondering how close our Secret Space Program is to recreating this warp drive technology... or do we have it already and were those craft ours?

Here's more on the observation of those Tic Tac craft:

On November 14, 2004, the US Navy's Carrier Strike Group Eleven, including the USS Nimitz nuclear aircraft carrier were conducting a training exercise off the coast of Southern California when the Navy's radar systems detected as many as 20 anomalous aerial vehicles. Rich Hoffman, a 25+ year Army Information defense contractor and founding member of SCU (Scientific Coalition for UAP Studies), discussed a recent paper his group published which examined the extreme speed, acceleration, and power outputs demonstrated by the Tic Tac UFOs. By some estimates, he reported, the craft reached speeds as high as 104,000 mph, and had a parabolic trajectory that contained as much energy each second as the detonation of a tactical nuclear weapon.

The Pentagon videos show a thermal signature rather than the object itself, he explained, and one of the UFOs traveled to the planned destination of a fighter jet, suggesting it had an awareness of the military's maneuvers. Further, Hoffman added, Navy airman Lt. Cmdr. Slight witnessed a mirage-like effect around the anomalous object. This rippling distortion might have represented a field connected to craft's propulsion, Hoffman suggested, and he related it to radiation residue at UFO landing sites. There were also reports of UFOs exiting or entering the water, and Hoffman pondered whether the Tic Tac's field might have been causing a disturbance or pattern in the water.

Dan Sherman

Between the ages of ten and 11, Dan Sherman was frequently visited by a major stationed at a nearby Air Force base. Major Roberts regaled young Dan with colorful tales of Air Force service and strongly encouraged him to enlist, and Dan subsequently wasted no time in joining up as soon as he was of age. According to his testimony, Sherman had been genetically engineered in the womb by the military to develop into a prime candidate for a rewarding career of telepathic communication with extraterrestrials.

Sherman also served as an electronic intelligence specialist, but the truly fascinating substance of his 12-year Air Force career was his alleged involvement in a secret program called “Project Preserve Destiny” that was operated by rogue actors under the auspices of the NSA.

After being trained to telepathically influence an image on a computer screen, Sherman was assigned to communicate with an extraterrestrial entity that he affectionately named “Spock.” Spock and Sherman never met face-to-face, but he alleges that he telepathically received technical information on human abductions from Spock that included data on geographic coordinates and pain thresholds.

According to other insiders, a deal was made in the 1950s between Earth governments and extraterrestrial groups that allowed the abduction of human beings in exchange for advanced technology. Strict abduction limits were set, but it soon became apparent that the aliens weren’t following the rules. There wasn’t anything that the Earth governments could do about it until they developed a defensive grid around the solar system called Solar Warden, which now determines which craft are allowed to enter the Earth’s atmosphere.

Since the Solar Warden project was launched in 1980, it stands to reason that Sherman may have been receiving abduction intel from alien groups that had only recently been forced to toe the line and fully disclose the extent of their operations.

Emery Smith

Emery Smith claims to have taken samples from over 3,000 extraterrestrial tissues. It’s possible that some of these tissues may have been genetically engineered by humans, since Smith claims that human scientists have been mixing the DNA of different species, earthly and extraterrestrial, for decades to make new and bizarre forms of life. Smith was featured in the documentary Sirius, in which he and Dr. Steven Greer dissect a tiny humanoid of unknown origin.

Every day after his normal Air Force duties were completed, Smith was taken to a secret underground research facility where he was provided with a seemingly endless supply of remarkable biological tissues. It was Emery’s job to take samples without asking questions. As a reward for his good behavior, he gradually progressed from receiving tissues the size of a salmon fillet to recognizable parts of whole bodies. It’s Emery’s belief that at least some of these samples were received in trade with extraterrestrial societies.

For years, Emery Smith fed information to David Wilcock in secret under the pseudonym "Paul." But when unknown actors crashed into his car head-on while he was inside, tore down the gate to his home, stole items from secret cubbyholes in the walls that only he knew about, and left a military-grade armor-piercing round on his kitchen counter as a warning, Emery decided that he was in more danger in the dark than he would be in the full light of public scrutiny.

Clifford Stone

Like Dan Sherman, Clifford Stone was also cajoled into a career in the military by a charismatic officer. When Stone was a child, Captain Brown of the United States Air Force struck up a conversation with him in a local bookstore and frequently stopped by the Stone residence for a few years thereafter. When Clifford received a draft notice in the mail, he was naturally eager to enlist despite his medical disqualifications.

To his great surprise, he was inducted into the military anyway. But it soon became apparent to Stone that the US government had something in mind for him other than standard service. His superior officers kept asking him if he was interested in UFOs, and then one day, an acquaintance with the NSA shoved him, without warning, into a room occupied by a grey alien.

It was revealed to Stone that it was to be his job to interface with extraterrestrials as an intuitive empath. Clifford was no stranger to alien contact; he had encountered a variety of otherworldly beings as a young child. But he was utterly unprepared for the deplorable way in which the military treated their extraterrestrial "guests." On one occasion, he supposedly even aided an alien prisoner in pulling off a daring jailbreak.

When he was a young boy, Stone had been told by an extraterrestrial friend that he was different from most other humans because he "had a heart." This observation couldn't have been far from the truth, since Clifford still breaks down into tears when he remembers his time as an alien contact.

Stone claims that he led a double life from the late 60's through his retirement in 1990. While officially assigned to an "NBC" Team (nuclear, biological and chemical retrieval and abatement detail), he asserts that he also served on Top Secret UFO crash retrieval missions where he had physical contact with downed ET craft and interactions with captured non-human life forms. The official NBC Team assignment allegedly served as a cover for those highly secretive and compartmentalized operations. Over a period of nearly 40 years, Stone has amassed one of the largest private collections of authentic government documents clearly establishing the hard reality of the UFO phenomenon.

William Tompkins

Some knew the late William Tompkins as an avid builder of model ships. Others were aware of his work as the corporate director of North American Advanced Space Research and as a member of the Red Team at General Dynamics Corporation. Yet some researchers care less about Tompkins's illustrious career in the aerospace sector and more about the claims he made about his involvement in a secret space program.

According to Tompkins, who wrote a book detailing his experiences in the secret side of Naval Intelligence, he was recruited before even finishing high school to back engineer extraterrestrial communications systems. Tomkins also claimed to have designed over 16 models of spacecraft for the Navy at his first think tank job, some of which are apparently still in use today. He believed that extraterrestrial civilizations had been meddling in human affairs for millennia, with some factions exploiting us for warlike purposes and others attempting to accelerate our evolution.

Perhaps the most interesting points that Tompkins makes are that various forms of alien species are not only telepathic, but also able to alter matter as well as move through space and time. He also describes how certain of these species can assume human form and even remotely access the minds of unsuspecting humans (possibly even completely taking control of their bodies) for the purpose of manipulating their thoughts and actions.

The NSA's use of signals intelligence based remote neural monitoring technology - which allows for the interfacing of a person's brain with artificial intelligence computers via the electromagnetic spectrum (Google Akwei VS NSA) - is obviously based on the NSA's utilization of reverse engineered alien technology, which the agency has been illegally and secretly using on the American people since the 1960s.

Tompkins also describes the US Military's concerns about UFOs and alien beings and the Military's rush to create advanced space based weapons, which could be used to defend the planet Earth against an ET threat to our civilization.

Tompkins died on August 21, 2017, in the midst of the first total solar eclipse viewable in North America in 99 years.

Bill Uhouse

Bill Uhouse was a test pilot and mechanical engineer at Area 51 who retired in 1987.

Has worked over 38 years in the field of creating flight simulators. One such project allowed him to work directly with an ET for an extended amount of time.

He was partnered with a J-Rod alien called "Jarod 2" from 1966 to 1979. He worked with "Jarod 2" to build a flight simulator in training Air Force pilots to fly advanced USAF stealth reconnaissance craft. Uhouse understood the gravitational field and what it took to get people trained to experience anti-gravity.

The advanced technology was based on research and development in the reverse-engineering field of UFO craft recoveries from after World War II. A UFO craft recovery incident in Kingman, Arizona in 1958 is what led to advanced stealth research.

Karl Wolfe

Though hard evidence of extraterrestrial visitation to planet Earth and the existence of secret government space missions is admittedly hard to come by, this might be more due to governmental interference than to an actual lack of documentation.

According to Karl Wolfe, a former Air Force sergeant who worked in the National Security Administration, photographs taken from orbit prior to the 1969 lunar landing that depicted a vast base of the dark side of the Moon had been purposefully destroyed by elements within NASA, the NSA, and the US Air Force.

Wolfe, in his own words:

... At any rate, I was in a color lab one day when my boss, Staff Sergeant Taylor, came over to me and said that they were having a problem with some equipment on the base and it was the first lunar orbiter program, where they had a mission to pretty much locate the first landing sites for the 1969 lunar mission for the astronauts.

So, he said they were having some problem with equipment over there. it was similar equipment to what we had - it was computerized contact printing equipment. He wanted to know if I would go over and take a look at it. He said to me, It's an NSA facility.

His security clearance status was raised to enable him to even enter the highly secure laboratory.

Wolfe's heart raced as he entered the here-to-fore forbidden hangar that day, and he was shocked to see the frantic activity in the lab, activities carried out by individuals of many different nations.

Wolfe had naturally thought that only American citizens would be in the NASA lab, but there were many individuals with guest name tags on, and obviously from foreign countries present this day, inferring that they were there on a temporary basis for some special occasion.

He felt a sense of panic as to his mission. Whatever he was called in for was of the utmost importance. He was told that the equipment in question was in a nearby dark room.

As he was led into the room, only the red glow of a safety light greeted him at first, but in a moment, he could make out the figure of one airman who manned the dark room.

Wolfe knew that the image processing equipment would have to be removed to be repaired, and he also knew that the diagnostics on this type of equipment would take some time to finish.

Arrangements were quickly made for the photographic equipment to be taken to another secure location for Wolfe to begin the painstaking task of troubleshooting the problem. As Wolfe waited for transport to arrive, he began to chat with the other airman. Wolfe carefully asked why the NASA work was being done at Langley and not NASA in Houston.

It was then that he was told that all of the NASA image information was downloaded to Langley, enhanced and made into the finished photographs that were then studied by different branches of the Armed Forces. The dark room attendant began to explain to Wolfe just what all the secrecy was about.

According to Wolfe, he was shown a single photograph of the base in confidence by a superior during his tenure at the NSA. Though he was duly impressed by the implications of the photo, he was more concerned than excited.

He knew as a trained intelligence agent that what he had seen was never meant for his eyes and that the very existence of such a photograph endangered the life of anyone who witnessed it.

Wolfe was told that recent enhanced images had surprisingly, yet clearly shown structures on the surface of the dark side of the Moon. Structures that definitely were not created by natural means, such as meteors, or ancient collisions with other heavenly bodies. The structures were created by intelligent beings.

"We discovered," the airman said, "a base of the back side of the Moon."

Wolfe was obviously stunned by this extraordinary disclosure. He remembers literally "shaking" trying to take in the enormity of what he had been told. Seeing Wolfe's disbelief, the dark room attendant continued:

"Yes, a base on the dark side of the Moon."

Although the attendant had not actually said that the structures were not created by inhabitants of Earth, it seemed to go without saying. Wolfe was still in amazement as he was now looking down at the very photographs he was trying to envision in his mind.

Bending down under the red glowing lamp, he was seeing what so very few would see. He could clearly make out geometric shapes, well organized, and well designed.

Most noticeable to him were what looked exactly like radar antennas, very similar to what one could see on Earth.

There was no doubt now in Wolfe's mind why the odd complement of scientists and investigators were in attendance at this place on this day. They had arrived to see and study what he was looking at now; structures made by intelligent beings on the Moon.

Questions flooded his mind now; Could Russia have made these structures, putting the first flag on the lunar surface? Could this be a joint venture of some kind? If so, by whom? Americans and aliens? Whomever was the creator, Wolfe felt like he had been caught stealing, or with his hand in the cookie jar. He was NOT supposed to see these photographs.

He could be arrested, or worse. He just wanted to do his job, leave, and never mention it again. Wolfe did finish the job he was commissioned to do, keeping the memories of that day dormant in his mind, and went on with his life.

Wolfe, however, was haunted by the images he saw that day for many years to come. After he left the active service, his security clearance prohibited him from leaving the United States for five years, and he was sworn to keep what he had seen to himself.

It would be thirty years before he told anyone about that unforgettable day.

TR-3B Astra Spacecraft Patent Filing

Patent Approved for Anti-Gravity Spacecraft using Mass Reduction & Non-Conventional Propulsion.

US Patent and Trade Office (PTO) on or about July 10, 2019, has granted to the US Department of the Navy an "Active" status to item #US10144532B2. This patent is classified as "B64G1/409 Unconventional Spacecraft Propulsion Systems."

The abstract for the patent states:

"A craft using an inertial mass reduction device comprises of an inner resonant cavity wall, an outer resonant cavity, and microwave emitters. The electrically charged outer resonant cavity wall and the electrically insulated inner resonant cavity wall form a resonant cavity. The microwave emitters create high frequency electromagnetic waves throughout the resonant cavity causing the resonant cavity to vibrate in an accelerated mode and create a local polarized vacuum outside the outer resonant cavity wall."

"It is possible to reduce the inertial mass and hence the gravitational mass, of a system/object in motion, by an abrupt perturbation of the non-linear background of local spacetime (the local vacuum energy state), equivalent to an accelerated excursion far from thermodynamic equilibrium (analogous with symmetry-breaking induced by abrupt changes of state/phase transitions). The physical mechanism which drives this diminution in inertial mass is based on the negative pressure (hence repulsive gravity) exhibited by the polarized local vacuum energy state (local vacuum polarization being achieved by a coupling of accelerated high frequency vibration with accelerated high frequency axial rotation of an electrically charged system/object) in the close proximity of the system/object in question.”

The term “superluminal”, means the spacecraft in question may possibly achieve faster-than-light travel.

A recent paper, by the inventor, published in the International Journal of Space Science and Engineering (Pais, S. C., Vol. 3, No. 1, 2015) considers the conditional possibility of superluminal craft propulsion in a Special Relativity framework.

The patent suggests this speed may be achieved through mass reduction, termed here as “negative mass/negative energy density”.

This involves the instantaneous removal of energy-mass from the system (craft) when the craft’s speed reaches ( $v=c/2$ ). The author discusses the possibility of using exotic matter (negative mass/negative energy density) to bring about this effect...The artificial generation of gravity waves in the locality of the craft, can result in energy-mass removal...

Flying through an Artificially Created “Void” – People who ride in cars and motorcycles, or pilots who fly aircraft, all know that as the speed of their vehicle increases, so too increases air resistance striking the front of the vehicle. One need merely to place their hand outside the window at speed and feel the resistance that the wind presents against one’s hand. With this in mind, we may also know that traveling at such high speeds consumes more fuel than at lower speeds.

The patent’s language purports that air resistance may be significantly reduced or effectively cancelled altogether by artificially generating a vacuum inside which the vehicle travels. In effect this means the vehicle would not experience wind resistance, or at least not as much.

“...local vacuum polarization, namely the coherence of vacuum fluctuations within the immediate proximity of the craft’s surface (outside vacuum boundary) is achieved, allowing for ‘smooth sailing’ through the negative pressure (repulsive gravity) of the ‘void’ (the void within the vacuum). It may be stated that the void ‘sucks in’ the craft.”

By reducing or eliminating air drag, this means the spacecraft mentioned in the patent would not need to use any (or as much) fuel through a medium (such as the Earth’s atmosphere) for sustained travel.

The drag elimination concept posited in the “void” discussion above brings to mind an extremely interesting question.

We always assume a spacecraft can fly through the air and the near vacuum of space. We assume air is made of matter and is subject to the “quantum vacuum fields” mentioned in the mass reduction section above. So, if enough power is artificially generated, then would the spacecraft be able to fly through solid matter also? Fly through walls and mountains?

Rumors of a New Alien / Human Spacecraft

This is a cooperative effort between humans and ETs. This information has been obtained through unconventional sources!

New Spacecraft Technology: The spacecraft is designated GP4-H3. “GP” is the general model designation; the “4” is the fourth generation of this craft type or series, and “H3” is merely an example version which is usually designated according to the specific purpose of the craft.

Modular Interchangeability for Purpose-Specific Missions: Former US Navy and space-tech informant William Tompkins, revealed that US Navy submarines in recent decades have been developed in both modular and scalable forms. “Modular” means that major parts for submarines (and later spacecraft developed for the Navy’s Secret Space Programs – SSPs) are “swappable”. Just as computer components (such as a mouse, or a USB data storage device) are “hot swappable” so too are major parts of this new model spacecraft.

Parts are swappable according to need. As applied to the spacecraft concept, a ship that has been tasked for long-distance travel will need more cargo space for carrying large stores of food, water, and other supplies. For craft that have been tasked with carrying many people, then a module can be fitted with many seats and beds, and perhaps a mess hall. Assuming the craft serves primarily as a medical ship, then the spacecraft’s modules can be swapped out with interiors commonly seen in hospitals. These role-specific “modules” can be fitted to the skeleton frame of the craft and changed out as-needed.

Upgrade to Existing Spacecraft Technologies: Because this ship will serve to be a flagship of sorts for the disclosure of already existing technology such as the TR3B (code named “Astra” or “Black Manta”), the GP ship will also serve as a modern upgrade to the TR3B’s somewhat antiquated technology features. From what evidence is available, the TR3B has been in active service for at least 20 years.

Summary of this crafts features:

- Mass Reduction: Allowing the spacecraft to be able to accelerate at incredible speeds.
- Reduced Field Resistance: To be used as a way to protect the spacecraft’s passengers from the powerful electromagnetic and other fields generated by the craft.
- Faster-Than-Light Speeds: May possibly achieve faster-than-light travel.
- Submersible Use in bodies of water: The craft may conceivably be able to glide effortlessly through water also. On Earth as well as water planets.
- Reliability / Predictability in Multidimensional Travel: Ability for multidimensional (quantum-based) travel. Predictability in being able to perform multidimensional/quantum travel without the undesirable variables.

Scientist Finds Hidden Portals in Earth's Magnetic Field

According to NASA, Jack Scudder—a researcher at the University of Iowa—has found "hidden portals on Earth's magnetic field [that] open and close dozens of times each day." Some of them are open for long periods of time.

Scudder says that these portals "create an uninterrupted path leading from our own planet to the sun's atmosphere 93 million miles away."

Called X-points or electron diffusion regions, they are located "a few tens of thousands of kilometers from Earth. The portals are created through a process of magnetic reconnection in which lines of magnetic force from both celestial bodies mingle and criss-cross through space. The criss-crossing creates these x-points.

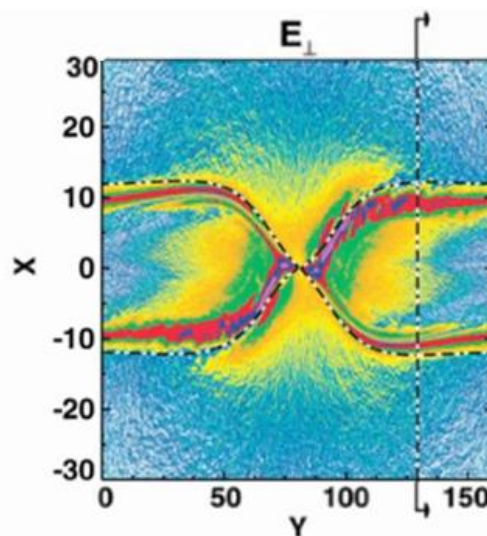

The portals are "invisible, unstable and elusive," opening and closing without any warning. When they open, however, they are capable of transporting energetic particles at high speed from the Sun's atmosphere's to Earth's, causing geomagnetic storms.

There's a way to locate them and Scudder has found it. He uses data by NASA's THEMIS spacecraft and the ESA's Cluster probes, following crucial clues found in the data from NASA's Polar spacecraft, which studied Earth's magnetosphere in the late 1990s:

Using Polar data, we have found five simple combinations of magnetic field and energetic particle measurements that tell us when we've come across an X-point or an electron diffusion region. A single spacecraft, properly instrumented, can make these measurements.

NASA is getting ready such a spacecraft in their Magnetospheric Multiscale Mission. A whole squadron of them: four ships that will be deployed around Earth and "surround the portals to observe how they work."

Time Travel: Theories, Paradoxes & Possibilities

Time travel: Moving between different points in time — has been a popular topic for science fiction for decades. "Doctor Who" to "Star Trek" to "Back to the Future" have seen humans get in a vehicle of some sort and arrive in the past or future, ready to take on new adventures. Each come with their own time travel theories.

The reality, however, is more muddled. Not all scientists believe that time travel is possible. Some even say that an attempt would be fatal to any human who chooses to undertake it.

Understanding Time

While most people think of time as a constant, physicist Albert Einstein showed that time is an illusion; it is relative — it can vary for different observers depending on your speed through space. To Einstein, time is the "fourth dimension." Space is described as a three-dimensional arena, which provides a traveler with coordinates — such as length, width and height — showing location. Time provides another coordinate — direction — although conventionally, it only moves forward. (Conversely, a new theory asserts that time is "real.")

Going against the standard view of most scientists, theoretical physicist Lee Smolin has suggested that time is real, rather than the illusion that Einstein's theory of relativity makes it out to be.

Most physicists think time is a subjective illusion, but what if time is real?

Einstein's theory of special relativity says that time slows down or speeds up depending on how fast you move relative to something else. Approaching the speed of light, a person inside a spaceship would age much slower than his twin at home. Also, under Einstein's theory of general relativity, gravity can bend time.

Picture a four-dimensional fabric called space-time. When anything that has mass sits on that piece of fabric, it causes a dimple or a bending of space-time. The bending of space-time causes objects to move on a curved path and that curvature of space is what we know as gravity.

Both the general and special relativity theories have been proven with GPS satellite technology that has very accurate timepieces on board. The effects of gravity, as well as the satellites' increased speed above the Earth relative to observers on the ground, make the unadjusted clocks gain 38 microseconds a day. (Engineers make calibrations to account for the difference.)

In a sense, this effect, called time dilation, means astronauts are time travelers, as they return to Earth very, very slightly younger than their identical twins that remain on the planet.

Through the Wormhole

General relativity also provides scenarios that could allow travelers to go back in time, according to NASA. The equations, however, might be difficult to physically achieve.

One possibility could be to go faster than light, which travels at 186,282 miles per second (299,792 kilometers per second) in a vacuum. Einstein's equations, though, show that an object at the speed of light would have both infinite mass and a length of 0. This appears to be physically impossible, although some scientists have extended his equations and said it might be done.

A linked possibility, NASA stated, would be to create "wormholes" between points in space-time. While Einstein's equations provide for them, they would collapse very quickly and would only be suitable for very small particles. Also, scientists haven't actually observed these wormholes yet. Also, the technology needed to create a wormhole is far beyond anything we have today.

Alternate Time Travel Theories

While Einstein's theories appear to make time travel difficult, some groups have proposed alternate solutions to jump back and forth in time.

Infinite Cylinder

Astronomer Frank Tipler proposed a mechanism (sometimes known as a Tipler Cylinder) where one would take matter that is 10 times the sun's mass, then roll it into very long but very dense cylinder.

After spinning this up a few billion revolutions per minute, a spaceship nearby — following a very precise spiral around this cylinder — could get itself on a "closed, time-like curve", according to the Anderson Institute. There are limitations with this method, however, including the fact that the cylinder needs to be infinitely long for this to work.

Black Holes

Another possibility would be to move a ship rapidly around a black hole, or to artificially create that condition with a huge, rotating structure.

"Around and around they'd go, experiencing just half the time of everyone far away from the black hole. The ship and its crew would be traveling through time," physicist Stephen Hawking wrote in the Daily Mail in 2010.

"Imagine they circled the black hole for five of their years. Ten years would pass elsewhere. When they got home, everyone on Earth would have aged five years more than they had."

However, he added, the crew would need to travel around the speed of light for this to work. Physicist Amos Iron at the Technion-Israel Institute of Technology in Haifa, Israel pointed out another limitation if one used a machine: it might fall apart before being able to rotate that quickly.

Cosmic Strings

Another theory for potential time travelers involves something called cosmic strings — narrow tubes of energy stretched across the entire length of the ever-expanding universe. These thin regions, left over from the early cosmos, are predicted to contain huge amounts of mass and therefore could warp the space-time around them.

Cosmic strings are either infinite or they're in loops, with no ends, scientists say. The approach of two such strings parallel to each other would bend space-time so vigorously and in such a particular configuration that might make time travel possible, in theory.

Time Machines

It is generally understood that traveling forward or back in time would require a device — a time machine — to take you there. Time machine research often involves bending space-time so far that timelines turn back on themselves to form a loop, technically known as a "closed time-like curve."

To accomplish this, time machines often are thought to need an exotic form of matter with so-called "negative energy density." Such exotic matter has bizarre properties, including moving in the opposite direction of normal matter when pushed. Such matter could theoretically exist, but if it did, it might be present only in quantities too small for the construction of a time machine.

However, time-travel research suggests time machines are possible without exotic matter. The work begins with a doughnut-shaped hole enveloped within a sphere of normal matter. Inside this doughnut-shaped vacuum, space-time could get bent upon itself using focused gravitational fields to form a closed time-like curve. To go back in time, a traveler would race around inside the doughnut, going further back into the past with each lap. This theory has a number of obstacles, however. The gravitational fields required to make such a closed time-like curve would have to be very strong and manipulating them would have to be very precise.]

Also, humans may not be able to withstand time travel at all. It would only take a centrifuge to traveling nearly the speed of light, but that would be lethal, said Jeff Tollaksen, a professor of physics at Chapman University, in 2012.

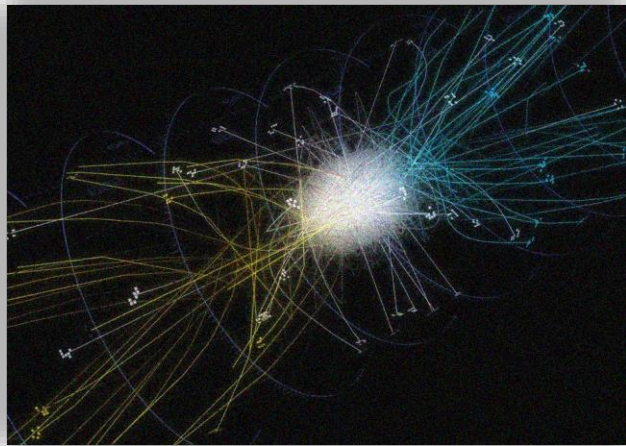

Using gravity would also be deadly. To experience time dilation, one could stand on a neutron star, but the forces a person would experience would rip you apart first.

So, is Time Travel Possible?

While time travel does not appear possible — at least, possible in the sense that the humans would survive it — with the physics that we use today, the field is constantly changing. Advances in quantum theories could perhaps provide some understanding of how to overcome time travel paradoxes.

One possibility, although it would not necessarily lead to time travel, is solving the mystery of how certain particles can communicate instantaneously with each other faster than the speed of light.

Has Antigravity Research Paved the Way for Warp Speed Space Travel?

As we dig deep into Antigravity Research, keep in mind that while some groups are doing research, others may have been using versions of it for years. Also consider what propulsion systems are in use in the TRs'.

Now researchers at CERN (the European Organization for Nuclear Research) are looking for experimental confirmation to establish the existence of antigravity. The secrets of antigravity may be unlocked, they believe, by an in-depth study and exploration of the properties of antimatter and this could he unleash the concept of the 'warp drive' from Star Trek scripts and release it into the real world.

Antimatter, The Basics

As the mirror version of regular matter, anti-matter particles carry the opposite charge of their counterparts. So, while the electron and proton that determine atomic structure feature negative and positive charges respectively, the charges of a positron (the antimatter version of an electron) and antiproton (the antimatter version of a proton) are the reverse. Consequently, when matching particles of matter and antimatter meet, the result is mutual annihilation, with both particles being converted to pure energy.

But there may be more differences between matter and antimatter than having opposite electrical charges. Their reaction to the influence of gravity may also be the opposite, although this has yet to be experimentally confirmed. If this does turn out to be the case, it means that if antimatter were exposed to a gravitational field it might move away from instead of toward the body creating that field. If it exists, this contrary movement would be a demonstration of antigravity in action.

Based on the standard model of physics, most scientists expect antimatter and matter to react identically to gravity. But they are raising the question anyway, mainly because of how little antimatter has actually been studied up to now. Until there are experimental results, nothing can be known for sure.

Thankfully, this situation is about to change. After pondering the problem, scientists at CERN have come up with an experimental design that will allow them to test the reactions of antimatter particles to gravity. The results they achieve should be definitive, and if they discover an antigravity effect it will change physics forever.

CERN and the Search for Antigravity

During their ongoing ALPHA antimatter study experiment, physicists working at CERN have been able to create antimatter in the form of electrically neutral antihydrogen particles, which have then been subjected to close scrutiny to verify their characteristics.

Antimatter cannot be handled in the traditional sense. Since we are made of regular matter, any attempt to touch it or otherwise make physical contact with it would destroy us in an instant. Therefore, electromagnetic traps had to be developed at CERN that would hold antimatter particles trapped in midair, so they could be studied in safe conditions while they remained stable and under control.

While caught in these traps, the antihydrogen particles have been measured and analyzed. This testing has confirmed that they are indeed the mirror images of normal atoms of hydrogen, and that they possess all the expected (reverse) properties.

Despite the comprehensiveness of the initial testing, gravity was excluded from the equation. This was because of experimental limitations that made the effects of gravity hard to isolate. But after a few years of brainstorming CERN scientists have now figured out how to track the reactions of antimatter particles to gravity exclusively, and they will soon be proceeding with a pair of experiments that should settle that question once and for all.

ALPHA-g (a modified form of the original ALPHA experiment) and GBAR are the names of the two experiments. In each case, antiprotons will be created inside particle accelerators and combined with positrons to create neutral atoms of antihydrogen. Working with antihydrogen makes sense because it is the most basic element of antimatter and is relatively easy to produce, and because it is electrically neutral and will not skew the results of the experiment by reacting to electromagnetic forces.

In each experiment, the antihydrogen atoms will be subjected to what is called a 'drop test.' The suspended particles will be released inside a gravitational field, and the researchers will see if they move down or up, or if the downward acceleration is slower than that of a matching hydrogen atom.

If in fact it is shown that antimatter reacts differently than matter to gravity, either by falling at a slower-than-predicted rate or actually moving away from the generator of the gravitational force, this could totally revolutionize the laws of physics. Antigravity could become a thing, breaking through barriers to space exploration that in the past might have seemed impregnable.

Of course, it would not be possible to harness the power of antigravity by building spaceships from antimatter. Nothing can touch antimatter without being destroyed in a blast of pure energy. But with a technology that holds antimatter trapped in place, it would be possible to manipulate the force of gravity in ways that could cancel, minimize or redirect its effects. This would mean much speedier acceleration for spaceships, which would no longer face any gravitational drag from astronomical bodies like the Sun, Moon or Earth.

Most revolutionary of all, the discovery of antigravity could extract the concept of the 'warp drive' from Star Trek scripts and release it into the real world. According to the mathematical solution for General Relativity discovered by theoretical physicist Miguel Alcubierre in 1994, spacetime could be deformed by antigravity forces to allow for faster-than-light travel, should it be confirmed that such a thing as antigravity exists and can be generated by human technology.

One of the most astonishing facts about science is how universally applicable the laws of nature are. Every particle obeys the same rules, experiences the same forces, and sees the same fundamental constants, no matter where or when they exist. Gravitationally, every single entity in the Universe experiences, depending on how you look at it, either the same gravitational acceleration or the same curvature of spacetime, no matter what properties it possesses.

At least, that's what things are like in theory. In practice, some things are notoriously difficult to measure. Photons and normal, stable particles both fall as expected in a gravitational field, with Earth causing any massive particle to accelerate towards its center at  $9.8 \text{ m/s}^2$ . Despite our best efforts, though, we have never measured the gravitational acceleration of antimatter. It ought to accelerate the exact same way, but until we measure it, we can't know. One experiment is attempting to decide the matter, once-and-for-all. Depending on what it finds, it just might be the key to a scientific and technological revolution.

You might not realize it, but there are two entirely different ways of thinking about mass. On the one hand, there's the mass that accelerates when you apply a force to it: the  $m$  in Newton's famous equation,  $F = ma$ . This is the same as the  $m$  in Einstein's  $E = mc^2$ , which tells you how much energy you need to create a particle (or antiparticle) and how much energy you get when you annihilate it away.

But there's another mass out there: gravitational mass. This is the mass,  $m$ , that appears in the equation for weight at Earth's surface ( $W = mg$ ), or in Newton's gravitational law,  $F = GmM/r^2$ . For normal matter, we know that these two masses — inertial mass and gravitational mass — must be equal to something like 1 part in 100 billion, thanks to experimental constraints from a setup designed over 100 years ago by Loránd Eötvös.

For antimatter, though, we've never been able to measure this at all. We've applied non-gravitational forces to antimatter and seen it accelerate, and we've created and annihilated antimatter as well; we're certain how its inertial mass behaves, and it's exactly the same as normal matter's inertial mass. Both  $F = ma$  and  $E = mc^2$  work just the same for antimatter as they do for normal matter.

But if we want to know how antimatter behaves gravitationally, we can't just go off of what we theoretically expect; we have to measure it. Fortunately, there's an experiment that's running now which was designed to do exactly that: the ALPHA experiment at CERN.

One of the great strides that's been taken recently is the creation of not just particles of antimatter, but neutral, stable bound states of it. Anti-protons and positrons (anti-electrons) can be created, slowed down, and forced to interact with each other, where they form neutral anti-hydrogen. By using a combination of electric and magnetic fields, we can confine these anti-atoms and keep them stable, away from the matter that would cause them to annihilate.

We've successfully held them stable for around 20 minutes at a time, far exceeding the microsecond timescales that unstable, fundamental particles survive. We've struck them with photons, discovering that they have the same emission and absorption spectra as atoms. In every way that matters, we've determined that antimatter's properties are exactly as standard physics predicts them to be.

Except, of course, gravitationally. The new ALPHA-g detector, built at Canada's TRIUMF facility and shipped to CERN earlier this year, should improve the limits on the gravitational acceleration of antimatter down to the critical threshold. Does antimatter accelerate, in the presence of the gravitational field on the surface of Earth, at  $+9.8 \text{ m/s}^2$  (down), at  $-9.8 \text{ m/s}^2$  (up), at  $0 \text{ m/s}^2$  (no gravitational acceleration at all), or some other value?

From both a theoretical and an applications perspective, any result other than the expected  $+9.8 \text{ m/s}^2$  would be absolutely revolutionary.

- The antimatter counterpart of every matter particle should have:
- the same mass,
- the same acceleration in a gravitational field,
- the opposite electric charge,
- the opposite spin,
- the same magnetic properties,
- should bind together the same way into atoms, molecules and larger structures,
- and should have the same spectrum of positron transitions in those varied configurations.

Some of these have been measured for a long time: antimatter's inertial mass, electric charge, spin and magnetic properties are well-known. Its binding and transitional properties have been measured by other detectors at the ALPHA experiment and line up with what particle physics predicts.

But if the gravitational acceleration comes back negative instead of positive, it will literally turn the world upside down.

Currently, there is no such thing as a gravitational conductor. On an electrical conductor, free charges live on the surface and can move around, redistributing themselves in response to whatever other charges are around. If you have an electric charge outside an electrical conductor, the inside of the conductor will be shielded from that electric source.

But there's no way to shield yourself from the gravitational force. There's no way to set up a uniform gravitational field in a region of space, either, like you can between the parallel plates of an electrical capacitor. The reason? Because unlike the electric force, which is generated by positive and negative charges, there's only one type of gravitational "charge," and that's mass-and-energy. The gravitational force is always attractive, and there's simply no way around that.

But if you have negative gravitational mass, all of that changes. If antimatter actually antigravitates, falling up instead of down, then gravity sees it as though it were made of anti-mass or anti-energy. Under the laws of physics that we currently understand, quantities like anti-mass or anti-energy don't exist. We can imagine them and talk about how they would behave, but we expect antimatter to have normal mass and normal energy when it comes to gravity.

If anti-mass does exist, though, then a slew of great technological advances, imagined by science-fiction writers for generations, would suddenly become physically possible. We can build a gravitational conductor and shield ourselves from the gravitational force. We can set up a gravitational capacitor in space, creating a uniform artificial gravity field. We could even create warp drive, since we'd gain the ability to deform spacetime in exactly the way that a mathematical solution to General Relativity, discovered by Miguel Alcubierre in 1994, requires.

It's an incredible possibility, one that's considered wildly unlikely by practically all theoretical physicists. But no matter how wild or tame your theories are, you must absolutely confront them with experimental data; only through measuring the Universe and putting it to the test can you ever accurately determine how the laws of nature work.

Until we measure the gravitational acceleration of antimatter to the precision necessary to determine whether it falls up or down, we must keep ourselves open to the possibility that nature might not behave as we expect. The equivalence principle may not be true for antimatter; it may, in fact, be 100% anti-true. But if that's the case, a whole new world of possibilities will be unlocked. We could change the currently known limits of what humans can create in the Universe. And we'll learn the answer in just a few years through the simplest of all experiments: putting an anti-atom in a gravitational field and watching which way it falls.

Is Antigravity Here Already?

Antigravity is a concept frequently featured in science fiction stories. Its theoretical basis in these tales has seldom been made clear but imagining antigravity technology into existence has set science fiction writers free to create spellbinding stories of intrigue about interstellar travel and alien contact.

But are these really just stories? And do we really need CERN to authenticate the existence of antigravity? Is it possible that antigravity was discovered long ago, but has been kept secret from the general public and mainstream scientists alike?

For many years, rumors and conspiracy theories have been bouncing around asserting that the secrets of antigravity have already been discovered by the United States government. During the 2001 Citizens Hearing on Disclosure, whistleblowers with connections to the military-industrial complex claimed that extraterrestrial craft using antigravity propulsion systems had been retrieved from crash sites and reverse engineered for human use.

For many years, credible witnesses have reported seeing gigantic black triangles floating silently and swiftly above their heads in the United States, Belgium and many other locations, apparently under the control of technology capable of defying gravity. Many believe these are experimental aircraft, quite possibly based on alien technology, which have been built in secret black projects undertaken at Area 51 or other hidden sites.

While many take reports from whistleblowers, and from UFO experts like the Stephen Greer, the primary organizer of the Citizens Hearing on Disclosure, with a grain of salt, the average citizens with no connection to UFO research have been reporting their sightings of the giant black triangles for more than two decades, and in some instances these mysterious flying machines have even been recorded on film. This strongly suggest some kind of antigravity technology is in use by someone, whether they're alien or human. Either way, the implications of these sightings are earth-shaking.

Memorandum 6751

This document identifies extraterrestrial presence by a United States government official in 1947. The memorandum was declassified and released to the public.

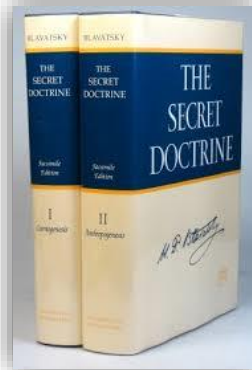

On November 30, 2010, under Executive Order 13526, the FBI disclosed various UFO files, including the Memorandum 6751 shown below

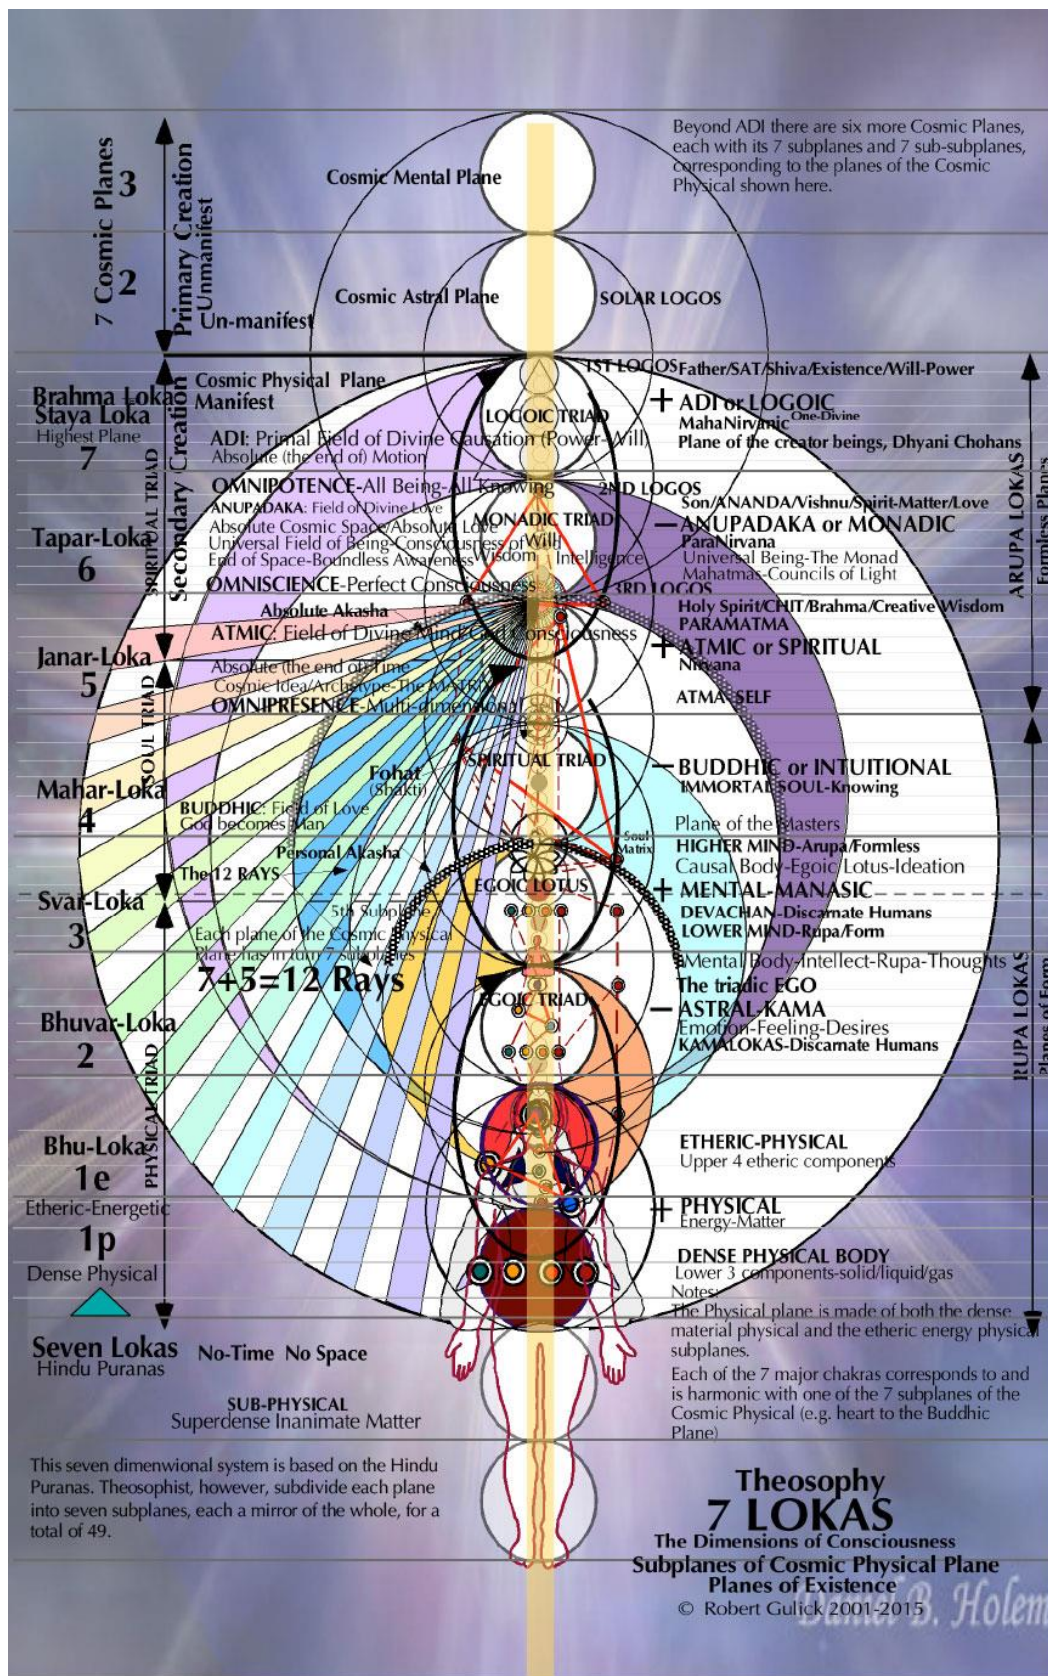

Former FBI officer John DeSouza, points to the memorandum as a significant document in ufology. This memo is significant in that it remained untouched from the disinformation campaigns of Project Grudge, Blue Book or Red Book.

Memorandum 6751 discloses the presence of supernormal beings from another world "which interpenetrates with our own and is not perceptible to us. The region from which they come...corresponds to the Lokas or Talas. Students of esoteric matters will understand these terms.

Note: Lokas or Talas is a concept in Hindu mythology that refers to alternate worlds or realities, and in the simplest context multiple dimensions. These worlds are explained in Prajapati, and later expanded in Theosophy.

The concept was later picked up in a classified US document called Memorandum 6751. CERN then builds the Large Hadron Collider, (so-to-speak) to spec, from theosophist Helena Blavatsky's Kosmic planes... in her 1888 book, The Secret Doctrine.

(For your information)

- A MEMORANDUM OF IMPORTANCE -

THIS MEMORANDUM is respectfully addressed to certain scientists of distinction to important aeronautical and military authorities, to a number of public officials and to a few publications.

The writer has little expectation that anything of import will be accomplished by this gesture. The mere fact that the data herein were obtained by so-called supernatural means is probably sufficient to insure its disregard by nearly all the persons addressed; nevertheless it seems a public duty to make it available. (The present writer has several university degrees and was formerly a university department head).

A very serious situation may develop at any time with regard to the "flying saucers." If one of these should be attacked, the attacking plane will almost certainly be destroyed. In the public mind this might create near panic and international suspicion. The principal data concerning these craft is now at hand and must be offered, no matter how fantastic and unintelligible it may seem to minds not previously instructed in thinking of this type.

1. Part of the disks carry crews, others are under remote control.
2. Their mission is peaceful. The visitors contemplate settling on this plane.
3. These visitors are human-like but much larger in size.
4. They are NOT incarnate earth people, but come from their own world.
5. They do NOT come from any "planet" as we use the word, but from an etheric planet which interpenetrates with our own and is not perceptible to us.
6. The bodies of the visitors, and the craft also, automatically "materialize" on entering the vibratory rate of our dense matter. (Op. "apparitions.")
7. The disks possess a type of radiant energy, or a ray, which will easily disintegrate any attacking ship. They reenter the etheric at will, and so simply disappear from our vision, without trace.
8. The region from which they come is NOT the "astral plane", but corresponds to the Loka or Talas. Students of esoteric matters will understand these terms.
9. They probably cannot be reached by radio, but possibly can be by radar, if a signal system can be devised for that apparatus.

We give information and warning, and can do no more. Let the newcomers be treated with every kindness. Unless the disks are withdrawn, a 34th century civilization with which our culture and science are incapable of dealing. A heavy responsibility rests upon the few in authority who are able to understand this matter.

Addendum: The Loka are oval shape, fluted lengthwise, oval with a heat-resisting metal or alloy not yet known. The front of the disk contains the controls; the middle portion is a laboratory; the rear contains armament, which consists essentially of a powerful ray energy apparatus, perhaps a ray generator.
